THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE WESTERN CHĀLUKYAS OF KALYĀṆI.

BY A. VENKATASUBBIAH, M.A., PH.D.; MYSORE.

THE numerous inscriptions of his time that have been found in Mysore and Madras contain the names of many of his feudatories and officers. Excluding those mentioned in FDKD., p. 450ff., the more important of them were :—The Mahāmāṇḍalēśvara Tribhuvana-malla-Kāmadēva belonging to the Pāṇdyas of Haive, who was ruling over that district in 1112 (EC. VII, Sk. 99; p. 120); the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandadanāyaka Sridharayya who was governing the vaḍḍarāvula and the two biḷkoḍes in 1086 with the Mahāmātya Perggaḍe Chaṅgaḍēvayya as his deputy in the Banavāse province (EC. VIII, Sb. 388; p. 141); the Mahāpradhāna Maneverggaḍe-danḍanāyaka Bhōgayya who was governing the Banavāse twelve-thousand province in 1125 with the assistance of Mēdimayya (who was the danḍanāyaka of the vaḍḍarāvula), Chāmunaḍamayya, Sōyipayya and others (EC. VIII, Sb. 170; p. 263); the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandadanāyaka Baladēvaiya who was ruling over the suika of the Banavāse province and the eighteen agrahāras in 1079 (EC. VII, Sk. 297; p. 263) in subordination to prince Jayasimha III; the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandadanāyaka Maneverggaḍe-danḍanāyaka Guṇḍamarasa who was ruling the vaḍḍarāvula, herijjūka, etc., of the Banavāse province in about 1100 (EC. VII, Sk. 111; p. 150); the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandadanāyaka Sarvadēva who held some office which is not mentioned in 1093 (EC. VII, Sk. 114; p. 151); the Mahāpradhāna Maneverggaḍe-danḍanāyaka Sālipayya under whom the Mahāpradhāna Rāmayya was governing the Banavāse province in 1123 (EC. VII, Sk. 246; p. 249); the Mahāsāmanta Bopparasa who was ruling at Bandanike in 1123 (ibid.); the Mahāmāṇḍalika Chattrarasa of the Sinda family who was ruling the Eḍevette seventy in 1118 (EC. VII, Sk. 316; p. 271); the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandadanāyaka Sūrya who with his brother the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandadanāyaka Āditya, held some office in the Nōlambavādi province in about 1125 (EC. XI, Dg. 90; p. 119); the Mahāsāmanta Nāgayya-nāyaka who was ruling a kampana of the Maṇḍali one-thousand in 1111 (EC. VII, Hl. 10; p. 280); the Danḍanāyaka Mādirāja who was governing the vaḍḍarāvula and suika of the Banavāse province in subordination to Anantapālayya in 1099 (EC. VII, Sk. 13; p. 84); the Mahāpradhāna Madhuvappa who was the perggaḍe of the Banavāse province in 1084 (EC. VIII, Sb. 235; p. 76); the Mahāpradhāna Sēnāpati Danḍanāyaka Mallidēvarasa who was the heggaḍe of the same province in 1089 (EC. VII, Sk. 166; p. 196); the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandadanāyaka Jekkamarasa who held some office in the Banavāse province in about 1100 (EC. VII, Sk. 111; p. 150) the Danḍanāyaka Gōpanarasa who was ruling the Banavāse province in 1116 (EC. VIII, Sb. 337; p. 124); the Mahāsāmanta

Oṭṭiḥaṭṭianna who was ruling the Chīlūrubaḷle thirty in 1076 (EC. VII, HI. 14; p. 281); the Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandaṇḍanāyaka Mahāpradhāna Hirisandhivigrahi Tambarasa who was governing the Sāntalige one-thousand and the agrahāras in subordination to prince Jayasīṃha III in 1079 (EC. VIII, Sb. 109; p. 211); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Kirttidēva or Kirttivarman who was ruling the Banavāse province in 1104 (EC. VIII, Sb. 421, p. 149); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Nanni-Sāntara who was ruling at Paṭṭi-Pomburchcha in 1077 (EC. VIII, Nr. 36; p. 255); his successor Vikrama-Sāntara (ibid., Nr. 40, p. 268); his successor, the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Rāya-Sāntara Tailapaṇḍeva who was ruling in 1089 (ibid., Sa. 103; p. 207); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Tribhuvanamalla Bhujabala-Gaṅga-Permmāḍi who was ruling the Maṇḍali one-thousand from 1076 to 1120; his successor, the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Tribhuvanamalla Nanniya-Gaṅga-Permmāḍi who ruled till 1123, and his successor, the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Tribhuvanamalla Vira-Gaṅga-Permmāḍi<sup>19</sup> who was ruling from 1125 to 1129; the Mahāsāmanta Dākaraśa who was governing the hejjuṇka of the Nolaṃbavāḍi province in 1093 (EC. XI, Hk. 3; p. 192); the Mahāsāmanta Sindharasa who was governing the vaddarāvula of the above province in 1109 (EC. XI, Jl. 12; p. 152); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Rāyapaṇḍya who was ruling the same province in 1127 (EC. XI, Dg. 122; p. 130); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvaras Jōyimayya (No. 519 of 1915), Kaliyamarasa (No. 515 of 1915), Sigarasa (No. 516 of 1915), Ballaya-Chōla-mahārāja, Chikarasa (No. 56C of 1915), and Mallarasa (No. 505 of 1915), who were all ruling the Sindavāḍi province between 1076 and 1109; the Mahāpradhāna Herilālasandhivigrahi Daṇḍanāyaka Raviyaṇa, mentioned in an inscription at Yēwūr of 1077 (EI. XII, p. 283); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Gaṅgarasa, son of the Mahāsāmanta Chāvundarasa and ruler of the Māsavāḍi one-hundred-and-forty in 1082 (No. 527 of 1914); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Yānemaśasa of the Ahihaya family, mentioned on p. 293 of EI. XII; and another Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Gaṅgarasa, different from above, who was ruling the Kukkavāḍi three-hundred in 1127 (EC. XI, Hk. 68; p. 206).

We have seen above that the last recorded date for Sōmēśvara II is 24th January, 1076 and that Vikramāditya VI was anointed on the throne, probably, on or before 11th February, 1076. From that time onwards he ruled without a rival till his death after which he was succeeded by his son Sōmēśvara III Bhūlōkamalla.

It is difficult to determine when these events, namely, Vikramāditya's death and his son's accession to the throne, took place. For, on the one hand, there is an inscription at Guṇjaganūr (EC. XI, Hk. 68; p. 206) which relates that Tribhuvanamalla, i.e., Vikramāditya VI was reigning on 24th January, 1127; and, on the other hand, one at Udri (EC. VIII, Sb. 141; p. 47) would seem to indicate that Bhūlōkamalla was the reigning king on 8th February, 1126. This equivalent, however, of the date of the latter inscription is not so reliable as the equivalent of that of the former inscription; and it is therefore better to believe with the Gaṇjaganūr inscription that Vikramāditya was reigning on 24th January, 1127.

Vikramāditya VI, then, was succeeded, probably in 1127, by his son Sōmēśvara III Bhūlōkamalla.<sup>20</sup> The earliest dates for him are 27th October, 1128 given in an inscription at Chitratāhalla (EC. VIII, Sb. 80 ; p. 23)<sup>21</sup> and 8th November, 1123 given in an inscription at Ingleshwar (KLISI. No. 226). The latest dates are 24th December, 1133 given in an inscription at Pedda-Tumbulam (No. 499 of 1915)<sup>22</sup> and 23rd February, 1135 given in another at Sômadēvarakoppalu (EC. VIII, Sb. 415 ; p. 148).

Among his feudatories and officers (see FDKD., p. 456) we have to include the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Mallidēvarasa of the Ahihaya family (EC. XII, p. 293), the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Bāchiga or Bācharasa of the Sinda family who was ruling Sindavāḍi in 1132 in subordination to prince Tailapadēva (No. 502 of 1915); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Trailōkyamalla Mallidēva-mahārāja who was ruling the same province in 1133; the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Tribhuvana-malla-Pāṇḍya who was ruling the Nolambavāḍi thirty-two-thousand in 1128 (EC. XI, Dg. 99 ; p. 124); Bhūlōkamalla Vira-Gaṅga-Permmāḍi who was ruling the Maṇḍali one-thousand in 1129 with the titles of Satyavākya Koṅguṣivarmma-Dharmamahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara (EC. VII, Sh. 99 ; p. 76); the Mahāpradhāna Maneverggade-daṇḍanāyaka Maṣaṇayya who held some office in subordination to the Kādamba Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Tailapadēva in 1128 (EC. VIII, Sb. 141 ; p. 47); the Kādamba Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Madhukarasa who was ruling the Banavāse province in 1135 (EC. VIII, Sb. 414, 415 ; p. 148); the Mahāsāmanta Sômarasa or Sômēśvara who was ruling the Nāgarakhaṇḍa seventy in 1135 (EC. VIII, Sb. 414, 415 ; p. 148); and the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Ekkalarasa who was ruling at Uddhare in 1130 (EC. VIII, Sb. 3, 7 ; pp. 1 and 3).

Sômēśvara III was succeeded, probably in 1137, by his son Permma-Jagadēkamalla who had the distinctive title of Pratāpa-chakravartin. The earliest date for him is 23rd December, 1137<sup>23</sup> given by an inscription at Managōḷi (KLISI. No. 232);<sup>24</sup> and the latest dates are 25th December, 1150 given by an inscription at Chinna-Tumbulam (No. 517 of 1915)<sup>25</sup> and 13th April, 1151 given by an inscription at Kumasi (EC. VIII, Sb. 86 ; p. 24).<sup>26</sup>

His chief feudatories and officers, excluding those mentioned by Dr. Fleet (DKD., pp. 457-8), were:—The Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Ekkalarasa, mentioned above, who was ruling at Uddhare in 1145 (EC. VIII, Sb. 132 ; p. 36); the Mahāpradhāna Yōgēśvara-daṇḍanāyaka who was ruling the Banavāse province in subordination to the Daṇḍanāyaka Bammaṇayya in 1142 (EC. VIII, Sb. 125 ; p. 34); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Mallidēvarasa who was ruling the Haive five-hundred and other divisions in 1143 (EC. VIII, Sa. 58 ; p. 94); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Goravādēva of the Kādamba family who was ruling the Banavāse province in about 1146 (EC. VIII, Sb. 67 ; p. 20); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Vikrama-Sāntara who was ruling the Sāntalige province in 1146 (EC. VIII, Nr. 37 ; p. 257); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvaras Baḷḷāriya Bīvarasa (Immaḍi-Bhīmarasa) and Baḷḷāriya Rāhamallarasa, two brothers who were ruling the Sindavāḍi province in 1142 (Nos. 204 and 206 of 1913); the Mahāpradhāna Daṇḍanāyaka Bāchimayya who was ruling the suika of the Banavāse and other provinces in 1141 (EC. VIII, Sb. 390 ; p. 144); and the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Lōkāditya of the Ahihaya family (EI. XII, p. 293).

Jagadēkamalla II was followed on the throne by his brother Taila or Tailapa III who had, usually, the cognomen of Trailōkyamalla. The earliest date for his reign is 24th

<sup>23</sup> In the light of what has gone above, the observations that I made in VSSDI., Introd. p. xiii, footnote, and p. 141, No. 233, are no longer tenable and must be given up. I now prefer to rely on the Managōḷi inscription referred to above and to believe that it was Jagadēkamalla II who was reigning on 23rd December, 1137.

December, 1151 given in an inscription at Chittûru (EC. VIII, Sb. 510; p. 165);<sup>27</sup> and the latest<sup>28</sup> dates are 10th May, 1161 given in an inscription at Bairêkoppa (EC. VIII, Sb. 567; p. 174) and 17th June, 1163 given in an inscription at Paṭṭadakal<sup>29</sup> (KLISI, No. 243).<sup>30</sup>

Among his feudatories and officers (see FDKD., p. 460) must be mentioned the Mahamaṇḍalêśvara Jagadêvarasa and Ekkalarasa (the Second) who ruled at Uddhare; the Mahamaṇḍalêśvara Mallidêvarasa, mentioned above, of Haive (EC. VIII, Sb. 369; p. 133); Baumarasa, the Māṇḍalika of Gutti (EC. VIII, Sb. 54; p. 17) in 1153; and the Mahamaṇḍalêśvara Rāya-Tailapadêva of the Śântara family (EC. VIII, Sa. 159; p. 231).

There are a small number of inscriptions with dates falling in Taila III's reign which give the name of the reigning Châlukya sovereign as Tribhuvanamalla. These are: an inscription at Sigebâgi (EC. XII, Ck. 32; p. 139) dated in 1162; one at Tiptur (EC. XII, Tp. 61; p. 89) dated in 1162; one at Bairêkoppa (EC. VIII, Sb. 567; p. 174); one at Herekere (ibid., Sa. 159; p. 231) and one at Bidare (EC. VI, Kd. 72; p. 46) dated in 1162. It would thus seem that Taila III had the cognomen of Tribhuvanamalla also.

There is an inscription at Elagalale (EC. VIII, Sa. 28; p. 182) which records that, on 3rd April, 1161, when the Châlukyan emperor Bhûlôkamalla was reigning and the Mahamaṇḍalêśvara Jagadêvarasa was ruling the Banavâse province, a certain Boppapa took part in a fight and was slain. It is not unlikely that this Bhûlôkamalla was the same as the Kumâra Bhûlôkamalladêvarasa who is mentioned in a Belgâme inscription (EC. VII, Sk. 165; p. 198), dated 9th May, 1149, of Jagadêkamalla II. He was perhaps a son of Jagadêkamalla II's brother Taila III and might have been in charge of some provinces during these two kings' reigns. But we do not hear of this Bhûlôkamalla again, which seems to indicate that he died before his father (?) Taila III. It is not likely that he could be meant by the term Bhûvallabha-permmâḍi which occurs in several inscriptions (EC. VI, Kd. 35, 36, etc.).

<sup>28</sup> An inscription, however, at Uttanḡi (No. 530 of 1914) cites for Jagadêkamalla a date which corresponds quite regularly to 21st May, 1156; this must be a mistake. (Note that the year Pramâthin mentioned in the date refers to the northern luni-solar year of that name and that there is no mistake made in the inscription in citing the Jovian year.)

<sup>30</sup> In p. 462 of DKD., Dr. Fleet has asserted that the above inscription is incorrect in that it mentions the Sinda Châvunḍa II as a feudatory of Taila III in May-June, 1163 when, as a matter of fact, "Taila III died certainly before the 19th January, A.D. 1163, which is the English equivalent of the Anamkoṅḡ inscription of Rudradêva in which the fact that he was then dead is mentioned." The date of this inscription is given in IA, XI, p. 12 and XXII, p. 111; and it reads as follows:—Śakavarshamulu 1084 vumēnti Chitrabhānu-samvatsara Māgha-su 13 Vaḷḷavāramu-nāṇḡu. Dr. Fleet has, on p. 262 of IA, XXII, taken that the term Vaḷḷavāra used here means Saturday and set down Saturday, 19th January, A.D. 1163, as its equivalent, while Kielhorn, taking Vaḷḷavāra in the sense of Sunday, set down (loc. cit., p. 111) Sunday, 20th January, 1163, as its equivalent.

It will be seen, in the first place, that this date belongs to the type which cite the week day as the only verifiable detail and which are therefore capable (see VSSDI., § 69; p. 82) of denoting any one of about four different days. And, secondly, I have shown (in § 26, ibid.) that Vaḷḷavāra frequently means Thursday.

Saturday, 19th January, 1163, is not therefore the only possible equivalent of the above date. An equally likely equivalent is Thursday, 30th December, A.D. 1163, on which day Māgha-su 13 ended at 10<sup>56</sup>. 25p. after mean sunrise; and considering the fact that the above Paṭṭadakal inscription gives the certain date of 17th June, 1163 for Taila III, I am inclined to think that it is this latter day, (30th December, 1163) that is the correct equivalent of the date in the Anamkoṅḡ inscription, and that there is no reason to mistrust the Paṭṭadakal inscription, which informs us that Taila III was living in June, 1163.

It was in the reign of Taila III that the Kañachurya usurpation of sovereignty took place in 1156. The usurper, Bijjala or Bijjana, was an officer of Jagadēkamalla II and was, later, a Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara under Taila III. He was, as such, entrusted with the supervision of the administration of the whole empire and made use of the opportunities he had to usurp the sovereign power in 1156. He ruled till about 1163 after which he was succeeded, in turn, by his four sons who continued to rule till about 1183.

Taila III, too, on the other hand, continued to reign, as we saw above, even after 1156 over such parts of the empire as still remained to him. And the last date for him was, as we saw above, 17th June, 1163.

He was succeeded in the same year by a certain Jagadēkamalla whose relationship to his predecessor is not known. The inscriptions of this Jagadēkamalla, whom I shall here call Jagadēkamalla III, are found in such parts only of the Chitaldrug district as formerly belonged to the Nolambavāḍi thirty-two-thousand province. There are three of such inscriptions—one at Harihara (EC. XI, Dg. 43; p. 91) dated 26th December, 1163; one at Bannikōḍi (EC. XI, Dg. 77; p. 112) dated 23rd January, 1167; and one<sup>21</sup> at Chitaldrug (EC. XI, Cd. 13; p. 8) dated in 1183.

The Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Vijaya-Pāṇḍya is mentioned as his feudatory in all these inscriptions; his capital is nowhere mentioned.

The next Châlukyan emperor was Vira-Sômēśvara or Sômēśvara IV Tribhuvanamalla who was a son of Taila III and who ascended the throne in, probably, the year A.D. 1184. The inscriptions of his time are not confined to the Chitaldrug district (the Nolambavāḍi province) but are met with in the Dharwar, Shimoga, and Bellary districts, i.e., in the Banavāse, Haive and Sindavāḍi provinces also.

The majority of inscriptions apply to him the usual Châlukya titles only, namely, Samatabhuvandīśvara, Srīprithivīvallabha, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Satyāśrayakulatilaka, and Châlukyaśharaya. To these titles, an inscription at Belagutti (EC. VII, Hl. 46; p. 296) adds that of Chakravartin while an inscription at Nandavaram (No. 546 of 1915) gives him the title of Vira-Nāniyāṇa and another at Malakapuram (No. 555 of 1915) calls him Trailōkyamalla Bhujabala-vīra Rāyamurāri Sômēśvara.

The two latter inscriptions represent that Sômēśvara was ruling from Jayantīpura or Banavāse as capital in 1184 and 1186; and so also does an inscription at Gārēḥaṭṭi (EC. XI, Cd. 33; p. 17) which is dated in the year 1187 and another at Medakerepura (EC. XI, Cd. 36; p. 19) which is dated in the year 1200.

The earliest date for him is 5th November, 1184<sup>22</sup> which is given by the Malakapuram inscription referred to above; the latest is 17th January, 1200 given by the Medakerepura inscription, likewise referred to above.

<sup>21</sup> In VSSDI, p. 138 (No. 225), I have set down 23rd March, A.D. 1119 as the equivalent of this date, because I then followed Drs. Fleet and Kielhorn in believing that it belonged to the reign of Vikramāditya VI. This is not so and the inscription belongs, as I have said above, to the reign of Jagadēkamalla III. The equivalent accordingly falls somewhere in the year A.D. 1183. My observations therefore under No. 224 on p. 137 of my SSDI, making out that Taila III. was reigning on 13th July, 1181, are not correct and should be cancelled.

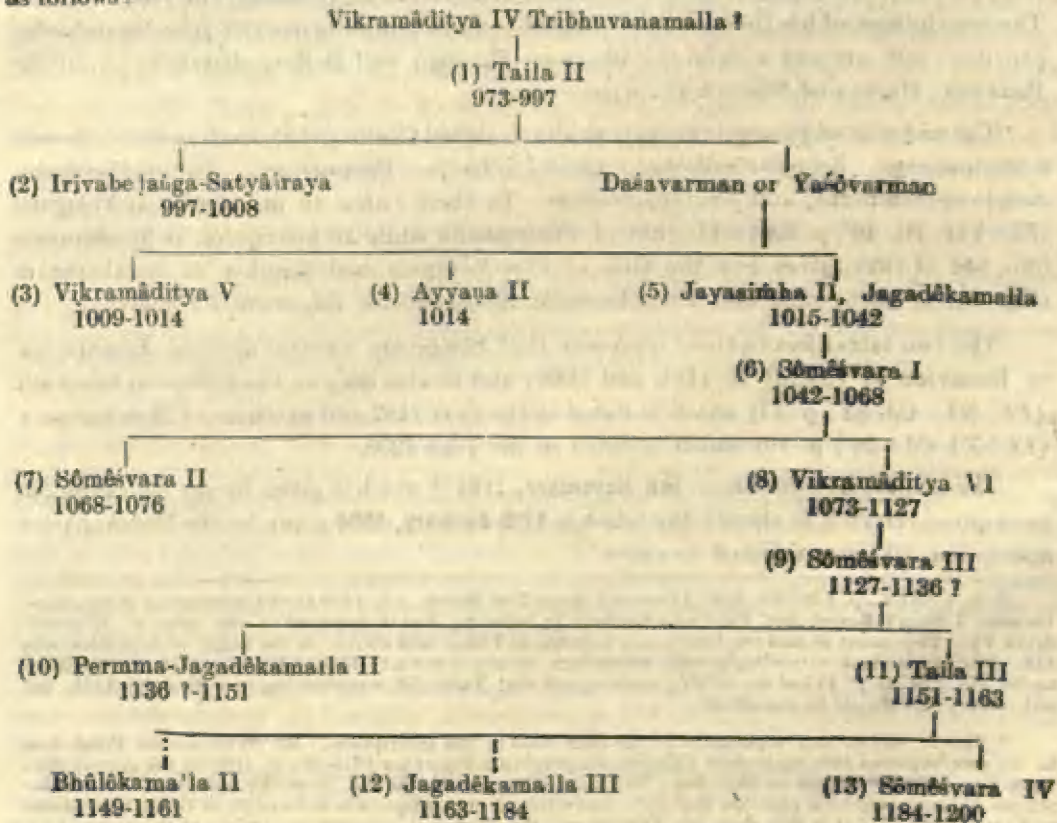

<sup>22</sup> This is the correct equivalent of the date cited in the inscription. Mr. Swamikannu Pillai has, to be sure, rejected this equivalent (Madras Epigraphist's Report for 1915-16; p. 102) on the ground that there was no solar eclipse on that day; but, as the distance of the sun from the node was 1°00, a solar eclipse did certainly take place on that day. And although this eclipse was not visible in India, there seems to be no doubt that it is this day, 5th November, 1184, that is the correct equivalent of the given date. Regarding invisible eclipses, see VSSDI, pp. 21, 22.

Among his feudatories and officers (see FDKD., p. 465) are to be mentioned the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Koṇḍemarasa who was ruling the Banavāse province in 1187 (EC. VIII, Sb. 47; p. 15); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Sōvidēva who was ruling at Bandapike in 1185 (EC. VII, Sk. 249; p. 250); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Mallidēvarasa who was ruling at Belagavartti or Belagutti in 1188 (EC. VII, Hl. 46; p. 296); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Vijaya-Pāṇḍya, mentioned above, who was ruling Nolambavāḍi; his successor, the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Tribhuvanamalla-Pāṇḍya who was ruling in 1200 (EC. XI, Cd. 36; p. 19); the Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Eṭaharasa who was ruling at Uddhare in 1187 (EC. VIII, Sb. 47; p. 15); the Mahāprāsthāna Māḷaparasa who was ruling the Sindavāḍi one-thousand in 1184 (No. 555 of 1915); and Padmidēva and Vatsarāja who were ruling the above province in 1186 (No. 546 of 1915).

Dr. Fleet has (on p. 465, n. 6 of DKD.) referred to some inscriptions which show that Sōmēśvara IV was ruling from Aṇṇigere (in the Dharwar district), and later, from Kalyāṇi as capital, while I have, above, shown that he had his headquarter at Banavāse at various times. These places passed into the hands of the Hoysalas (see EC. VII, Sk. 138; p. 188) and of the Yādavas (see FDKD., p. 504) about 1200 or even earlier, with the territories surrounding them; and the Chālukyan empire thus came to an end, having been absorbed on the north by the Yādava empire and on the south, by the empire of the Hoysalas.

The revised chronological table of the later Western Chālukyas may now be written as follows:—

There are a number of Hoysala inscriptions contained in vols. VI, V, and XII of the Epigraphia Carnatica in which the overlordship of the Châlukyan emperors is acknowledged by the mention of their names in the opening. These names, however, do not agree with those given in the inscriptions of the Châlukyas themselves as can be seen by a comparison of the table given below<sup>23</sup> with that given above:—

Number of Inscription.	Date.	Name of Châlukyan Emperor mentioned.
V, Cn. 248 .. .. .	9th April, 1133 .. ..	Tribhuvanamalla.
V, Ak. 124 .. .. .	25th April, 1135 .. ..	"

VI, Kd. 36 .. .. .	1202 .. .. .	"
VI, Kd. 38 .. .. .	1191 .. .. .	"

It is scarcely probable that the names cited above of the Châlukyan sovereigns as ruling on the dates shown is correct. I have shown above that Taila III had perhaps the cognomen of Tribhuvanamalla; and the inscriptions V, Ak. 117, XII, Tp. 61 and VI, Kd. 62 may therefore perhaps be correct inciting that name. It is not, however, probable that Sômesvara III, who had the cognomen of Bhâlôkamalla and perhaps, as shown above, of Trailôkyamalla also, could have had the cognomen of Tribhuvanamalla as V, Cn. 248, etc., would indicate or that of Âhavamalla as V, Ak. 30, etc., would indicate. And, similarly, it is equally improbable that Sômesvara IV, who had, as shown above, the cognomens of Tribhuvanamalla and Trailôkyamalla, had in addition the cognomens of Jagadêkamalla and Bhûvallabha-Permmâji.

It is therefore my opinion that these inscriptions are unreliable so far as the mention of the reigning Châlukyan sovereign is concerned. The incorrectness in this respect was perhaps due to the fact that the Hoysalas, while nominally the feudatories of the Châlukyas, were, from about 1120 onwards, so independent that they were content with the mention of some Châlukyan king as overlord in a few of their inscriptions.<sup>24</sup>

<sup>23</sup> This table is not complete as I have here, for the most part, included such inscriptions only as contain dates that yield a reliable English equivalent and have rejected the other inscriptions.

<sup>24</sup> Note in this connection that the inscriptions VI, Kd. 35, 36 and 38, referred to above, all represent the Châlukya Bhûvallabha-Permmâdirâya as ruling from Kalyâsi as capital in 1136, 1202 and 1191.

IDENTIFICATION OF VINAYASAMUKASE IN ASOKA'S BHABRA EDICT.

BY SAILENDRANATH MITRA, M.A., CALCUTTA.

IN course of collecting materials for the University publication of a monograph on Asoka's Dhamma as a landmark in Indian literature and religion, a work which my estimable friend Dr. B. M. Barua, M.A., D.LITT., so kindly invited me at the instance of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee to share with him, I lighted upon a paragraph of a discourse in the Majjhima, which struck me so much that I thought it might be identified with the much disputed passage contemplated by Asoka's Vinayasamukase in the Bhabra Edict. The discourse is entitled the Sappurisasutta (Majjhima, III. P. T. S., pp. 37-45) and the paragraph in question is as follows :

Puna ca param, Bhikkhave, asappuriso vinayadharo hoti. So iti paṭisaṃekikkhati : ahaṃ kho 'mhi vinayadharo, ime pana 'āne bhikkhū na vinayadharā ti. So tena vinayadharattena attān' ukkamseti param vambheti. Ayam pi, Bhikkhave asappuriso dhammo. Sappuriso ca kho, Bhikkhave, iti paṭisaṃekikkhati : na kho vinayadharattena lobhadhammā vā parikkhayaṃ gacchenti, dosadhammā vā parikkhayaṃ gacchanti, mohadhammā vā parikkhayaṃ gacchanti. No ce pi vinayadharo hoti, so ca hoti dhammānudhammapaṭipanno sāmīcipaṭipanno anudhammacāri, so tatha puṇṇo so tatha pāsaṃso ti. So paṭipadam yeva antaram karitvā tena vinayadharattena n'ev'attān' ukkamseti na param vambheti. Ayam pi, Bhikkhave, sappurisa dhammo (pp. 39-40.)

The extract may be rendered as follows :—

Once again, Bhikkhus, there may be a bad man who is well versed in the Vinaya. He reflects thus: 'Verily am I a vinayadhara, and these other bhikkhus are not.' He, by the very reason of his being a vinayadhara, exalts himself and disparages others. This, too, Bhikkhus, is the way of the bad man. The good man, on the other hand, Bhikkhus, deliberates thus: "Verily, by the possession of Vinaya-learning only, neither the states pertaining to greed, nor those pertaining to hatred and delusion go to destruction. A man may not possess the Vinaya-learning, but if he has rightly pursued the path of the Norm and wisely, and acts up to it, he, by that very reason, is worthy of honour and of praise." Having only borne in mind the progressive course, he by reason of his being vinayadhara only, neither exalts himself nor disparages others. This too, Bhikkhus, is the way of the good man.

In the occurrence of the words vinayadhara and attān' ukkamseti in the foregoing extract, one may hardly resist the temptation of discovering a clue to the identification of Vinayasamukase. But the simple discovery of a discourse or a paragraph having only a seeming resemblance of words, does not, I think, constitute a sufficient reason by itself for establishing an identification beyond doubt. The suggestion offered concerning the identification should therefore be studied in the light of evidences cited in these pages.

Mr. Edmunds seems inclined to identify it with the Dhammacakkapavattanasutta, the first sermon, as he thinks, delivered by Buddha at Isipatana (Buddhist and Christian Gospels, I, p. 60). But the sermon, wherever it occurs, whether in the Vinaya texts or in the Nikāyas, would seem wide of the mark, since it is difficult to conceive any direct connection between the Dhammacakkapavattanasutta and Asoka's Vinayasamukase, which latter, as its title implies, must have bearing upon the subject of Vinaya (i.e., discipline in the widest sense); and judging from the precision with which the Buddhist emperor enumerated his other passages, we are led to think that the Dhammacakkapavattanasutta would hardly justify his meaning; for this particular sermon no more represents the Vinaya as a whole than a detached sutta taken at random from the canon.

Prof. Oldenberg's conjecture is that Asoka probably had in contemplation the Pātimokkha, the criminal code of the Buddhist Order. It is still a matter of dispute if the Pātimokkha rules, as we now have them, were put together in the form of a code at or before the time of Asoka, considering that the Pātimokkha was not included amongst the texts recited in the first Buddhist Council.<sup>1</sup> The word pātimokkha occurring in such stock phrases of the canon as pātimokkhasaṃvarasamvuta, is of course old enough, probably older than the Pātimokkha itself, and certainly much older than the time of Asoka, but we must remember that the word, although a technical term, connoted quite a different meaning from that of a book or a formal code as is now denoted by Pātimokkha. In the later texts, notably the Milinda, we have an adjectival form of the word qualified and preceded by another adjective (vara-pātimokkhiya).<sup>2</sup> Here, too, we must note that the term does not denote the formal code called the Pātimokkha, but signifies a wider meaning, tentatively, discipline. In this connexion we are reminded of an important passage in the Āṅguttara,<sup>3</sup> (where the Thera Upāli distinguishes between sikkhāpada (moral precepts) and pātimokkha (disciplinary code), both of which he regards as auxiliary to vinaya in its widest sense (vinayaṅugahāya). We can imagine that with the progress of time, especially after the death of Buddha, the need of a formal code made itself felt strongly enough, when schism after schism broke out within the community threatening its existence as an organized association. Therefore, the Pātimokkha, judging from its main object, has little bearing on the religious ethical system upheld by Asoka.

Dealing with the list of recommended passages in the Bhabra Edict, Prof. Rhys Davids says, "There is a word<sup>4</sup> at the commencement of this list, which may either be an adjective applied to the whole list, or the name of another passage" (Buddhist India, p. 170). Of these two suggestions brought forward by so learned a scholar as Prof. Rhys Davids, the latter, viz. that Vinayasamukase may be the title of a separate passage, would seem, judging from the manner of Asoka's enumeration of the Dhammapariyāyas, more acceptable and true.

The Rathavinīta Sutta (Majjhima-N., I, pp. 146-151), rightly identified by Dr. Neumann (Buddhist Reden, I, p. 152) with Asoka's Upatissa-Pasine, contains two

<sup>1</sup> Buddhaghosa, in his enumeration of the texts recited in the First Buddhist Council, does not mention the Pātimokkha as a work by itself. The texts recited were Mahāvibhaṅga, Utharovibhaṅga, Khandaka, and Pariedra (Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, pp. 12-13). He further points out that some of the texts included in his time in the Vinaya-piṭaka were not recited in the first Council and his remark, judging from the above list, applies exclusively to the Pātimokkha. Cf. Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, I, p. 17:—Tattha paṭhamasaṅgitiyaṃ saṅgitaṃ saṅgitaṃ sabbam pi samodhānetva ubbayāni pātimokkhāni dve vibhaṅgāni dvāvāsati khandakā solasa parivārāni idaṃ vinaya-piṭakam nāma

There is occasional mention of ubhayāni pātimokkhāni in a few passages on Vinaya in the Āṅguttara Nīkāya. But, the date of the passages being disputed, we are not justified in fixing the date of the pātimokkhāni on the evidence of the Āṅguttara alone.

expressions, viz. Upatissa and Pañhā,<sup>5</sup> which are highly suggestive as furnishing a clue to a possible identification, inasmuch as they admit of a compound Upatissa-Pañho, i.e., Upatisappasine in Aśoka's language. But this linguistic semblance as a ground for identification, would, as we have said, hardly find favour with us, had it not been corroborated by a closer and more striking resemblance between the teachings of Upatissa's questions in the Majjhima and Aśoka's system, the supreme goal of both of which is clearly stated as the attainment of Nibbāna or Sambodhi. Carrying our investigation on similar lines, we further discover that in recommending the Rāhulovādasutta, the king was careful enough to discriminate it from other suttas of the same name, by mentioning its subject-matter, viz. conscious falsehood (musāvādaṃ adhigicaya). It seems that the king was not satisfied with the method of the compiler of the canon in distinguishing the several Rāhulovādasuttas with the different attributes Ambalaṭṭhikā, Mahā and Culla, which gave no idea of the different subject-matters thereof, and that therefore he felt the necessity of clearly stating the particular one he meant, by mentioning its subject-matter. Similarly, the naming of Munigāthā (identified with the Munisutta in the Suttanipāta) would seem, from its style, more accurate than that of the earlier compiler.

From all this a presumption may arise that in attaching samukase to vinaya, the king had a very special object in view, which was to distinguish a certain canonical passage on Vinaya from others devoted to the same or similar subject, and that there may be a discourse somewhere in the canon which contains expression that might suggest the very title of Aśoka's Vinayasamukase. But what is that? The Sappurisasutta in the Majjhima is the one which strikes our imagination. Curiously enough, it actually contains certain expressions, e.g. vinayadhara and attān' (i.e., attānaṃ) ukkaṃseti, which suggest at once a derivation of samukase other than that by which it means 'excellent' (uttama), we mean sāmaṃ (attānaṃ) ukkaṃsetti sāmukkaṃso. Perhaps the strongest philological proof in support of this derivation of samukase is the occurrence of attukkaṃsaka, a form derived similarly in the Majjh. I. pp. 19, 95, 97, 98. We admit that the expressions vinayadhara and attānaṃ ukkaṃseti cannot be combined so happily as 'Upatissa' and 'pañhā' to make up the title vinayasamukase, meaning primarily the discourse where Buddha deals with a person who exalts himself by his vinaya-learning (vinayadharattena attān'ukkaṃseti) and disparages others (paraṃ vambhēti) not learned in the vinaya, and who should, learned as he is in the vinaya, follow the way of the good man, which aims at the extinction of greed, hatred and delusion (lobha, dosa, moha). Moreover the sutta, of which the paragraph on the conduct of the vinayadhara may be taken as a type, deals with vinaya, not in its narrow sense of Pātimokkha or criminal code, but in its wider sense of training (sikkhā), moral and spiritual. Besides, the sutta inculcates, by comparing and contrasting the ways of a good man and those of a bad man—both learned—that those persons should be honoured and praised who, although not well versed in vinaya, although not powerful preachers of the Norm, etc., follow the rules of the Norm to the spirit and not to the letter merely. It is apparent from this that the sutta has a close bearing on the principle of toleration taught by Aśoka, particularly in his Twelfth Rock Edict, the very expressions of which betray a likeness,—so much so that the king's principle might be regarded as a logical inference drawn straight from the teaching of the sutta, as can be seen from the summary given below with a view to facilitate comparison :—1. The Sappurisasutta.—A bad man, although learned, who follows a certain course of conduct, exalts himself by his learning and system and disparages others who are not learned likewise, and do not follow exactly the same system; whereas a good man, instead of exalting himself because of his learning and method, and disparaging others who are not likewise learned and do not follow the same method, considers a person worthy of honour and praise (pujjo, pāsāṃso), if the latter has only adhered to good form and if he only acts up to the Norm. Thus what the Sappurisa really bears in mind (antaraṃ karoti) is the conformation of people to the path (paṭipadaṃ yeva), i.e., the standard.

2. The Toleration Edict.—Aśoka as a good man inculcates on the same lines that he cares not (na manati, Khālsi text) "so much for gifts or external reverence as that there should be a growth of the essence of the matter (sāraṇaḍḍhi,† Gīrnār text) in all sects. The growth of the essence of the matter assumes various forms, but the root of it is restraint of speech, to wit, a man must not do reverence to his own sect or disparage that of another man without reason" (ātpapāsāṇḍapūjā va parapāsāṇḍagaraṇā va no bhavē apakāraṇamhi, Gīrnār text).

In an interesting note on the Bhabra Edict (JRAS., 1915, p. 805 ff.) Dr. B. M. Barua calls attention to a number of dialogues in the Nikāyas, the themes of which are moral, characterised by the familiar expression ariyassa vinaya. He appends a list of these dialogues, although he lays great stress upon the Sīṅgālovādasutta (Digh. Vol. III, P.T.S.), otherwise styled the gīhivinaya in the Sūmāṅgalavikāsinī, the fifth-century commentary on the Dighanikāya. But, although he seems to come much nearer the truth, the vagueness attaching to his long list is evident. In calling attention to the ariyassa vinayas and emphasizing the Sīṅgālovādasutta, he seems to have taken his clue from the character of Aśoka's ethical system, which is evidently meant for the householders. The adjectival genitive ariyassa (of the Elect) corresponding to the adjective sāmuḍḍhāsika (meaning uttama and attached to dhammadesanā and pañṇā in the canonical texts), is not without its influence upon him. But, as we are persuaded to think, the clue ought to have been taken from the naming of Aśoka's selections and then verifying the result obtained, by the bearings of the selected canonical text upon Aśoka's system as a whole. I am, however, grateful to Dr. Barua for drawing my attention to a discourse in the Aṅguttara, called the Sugatavinaya, the theme of which is the stability of the saddhamma (saddhammassa phīti); and it is interesting to note that this also was the single object that Aśoka kept in view in selecting his dhammapaliyāyas (saddhamme cilathitike hāsatiti). Whether or not the Ariyassavinaya or the Sugatavinaya may be identified with Aśoka's Vinayasamukase is an open question, but it cannot be denied that they have an intimate bearing on the teaching inculcated by the Great Maurya.

† The Sāropamasutta of the Majjhima may be taken alongside of the Sappurisa to account for sāraṇaḍḍhi, implying a wider notion of toleration. The Mahāsāropama extends toleration expressly to all religious sects.

MISCELLANEA.

KĀTYĀYANA AND PARTHIVA.

शाक-पार्थिव of Kātyāyana, is given under Pāṇini 2. 1. 60 in the Gaṇa-pāṭha. The Kāśikā also gives it under that rule. But I find it commented upon under rule 2. 1. 69 ( वर्णो वर्णेन ) in the Bombay edition of the Mahā-Bhāṣya. The last location is clearly wrong as Patañjali in his remarks on the vārttika quotes 'वर्णो वर्णेन' which proves that it could not have been under that rule. Nor has the vārttika any connection with the rule. We must therefore fall back on the Kāśikā and the Gaṇa-pāṭha and go to the rule 2. 1. 60. It is given in the Gaṇa-pāṭha because it refers to a group: शाक-पार्थिवसंज्ञा उपसंख्यानम्. It may be noted that to this original vārttika Patañjali would add "उत्तरपदसंज्ञा" (वक्तव्यः) and the later writers have treated the vārttika as reading शाक-पार्थिवसंज्ञा उपसंख्यानमुत्तरपदलोपश्च.

The Gaṇapāṭha gives three examples of this group introduced by Kātyāyana: शाक-पार्थिव, कुतप-सौवृत, अजा-सौवलि. This proves that शाक and पार्थिव are not independent members of the group of Kātyāyana, but they go together.

Patañjali explains these three as the Śāka-eating (शाकजीवी) Pārthiva, the blanket-wearing (कुतपवासाः) Sauruta (a descendant of Susruta and the goat-dealer (अजापदः) Taulvali (one of the family of Tulvala). The authors of the Kāśikā reject Patañjali's explanation of the vegetable-eating Pārthiva and give their own: शाकपधानः पार्थिवः 'Pārthiva, the chief of the Śākas.' It is possible to explain Patañjali's interpretation in another way: "the Śāka-ruling" Pārthiva. But it seems strained.

Patañjali's interpretation of the other two expressions of Kātyāyana, they being old Brahmanical expressions, ought to be taken as correct. A particular Sauruta was known as the "blanket-Sauruta" and a particular Tulvala as "the goat-(man)" Tulvala. The value of these examples consists in the fact that we have to take the other example, our Śāka-Pārthiva, as a śaṭpuruṣa compound. In view of the rule 2.1.57 विद्येयं विद्येय्येन बहुलम् which governs all the succeeding rules up to 2.1.60, we have to take शाक as the qualifying member (विद्येय) and Pārthiva as the principal member (विद्येय्य). Pāṇini is dealing from 2.1.57 to 2.1.60 with compounds formed of adjectives and nouns: विद्येयं विद्येय्येना (सह) बहुलं (समस्यते) (Kāśikā). Now Kātyāyana adds ("उपसंख्यानम्") these three compounds. (Patañjali adds one more; वदि-मौदगल्य- 'the Stick, Maudgalya') to the class for which Pāṇini gives 3 or 4 rules. The supplementary examples belong to the विद्येय-विद्येय्य class with this difference that the two members of each compound of Kātyāyana are in apposition to each other (samānādhikaraṇa), as according to Patañjali and the Kāśikā authors, Kātyāyana said or implied. Therefore this much is clearly deducible that although the chief word in the compound is Pārthiva, Śāka is very nearly the same. Similarly the nick-names Kutapa, Aja and Yashṭi really are the same persons as Sauruta, Taulvali and Maudgala.

It must be noticed that the word Pārthiva does not denote here 'king', for the rule is limited to Pārthiva.<sup>1</sup>

Now who could be this man called Pārthiva and Śāka at the same time? It must be, it seems to me, the "Scythic Parthian" king.

To denote the king of the Parthians, we ought have got, to be exact, Pārthava, Kātyāyana living on the North-Western Frontier, or even at Pāṭaliputra, would have heard of the king who set up the Parthian monarchy (or one of his powerful successors) and would have adopted the nearest approach in Sanskrit, Pārthiva. Compare the Yavana of Sanskrit.<sup>2</sup> It seems to me Kātyāyana was reproducing the official designation of the Parthian king Ar-Sāces<sup>3</sup> (the ruling Śāka) by his Śāka-Pārthiva.

THE WORDS NĪVĪ AND VINĪTA AS USED IN INDIAN EPIGRAPHS.

BY RADHA GOVINDA BASAK, M.A. ; CALCUTTA.

IN February last, ante, Vol. XLVII, pp. 50-56, Mr. K. P. Jayaswal has published a very learned article under the heading "The Arthaiśāstra Explains",—in which he has attempted to make clear with the help of Kauṣilya's Arthaiśāstra, the meaning of some words used in some of the Indian epigraphs. Students of Indian Epigraphy will very gratefully accept the explanation he has offered for the words vracha and vachabhūmika (with some reservation with regard to the foot-note on p. 55) as used in the Aśokan Edicts and for the word praṇaya as used in the Junāgadh rock inscription of Rudradāman's time. But I am afraid the explanations he has proposed for the term nīvī as occurring in several old inscriptions and the term vinīta as used in Aśoka's Rock Edict VI will not meet with the approval of scholars.

Let us take up the word nīvī first. Mr. Jayaswal has very likely kept in view the meaning vastra-bandhanam, as offered to this word by lexicographers, when he proposes that the word "nīvī" of the inscriptions is to be translated as "document" or "despatch" and "akshaya-nīvī" as "permanent document", and the reason he sets forth for the acceptance of such an explanation is that the meaning "despatch" is to be derived from the physical feature,—"the string," which was tied round the despatch or official returns in ancient days. In support of this view he refers his readers to some passages in the Arthaiśāstra (pp. 61, 62 and 64). I suppose that the most important meaning of the word nīvī, as given in Amara's and Hemachandra's lexicons, that would suit the passages in the inscriptions and in the Arthaiśāstra, has escaped the notice of Mr. Jayaswal, otherwise he would never have proposed such an unsuitable meaning for the word. In Amara Book II. 9, 80 we find that the word nīvī has been put as a synonym for paripaṇa and mūladhana (i.e. the capital or principal in sale and purchase and such other transactions) ["Kraya-vikrayādi-vyavahāre yanmūla-dhanam tasya"—Bhaṭṭojidikshita]. So has Hemachandra (II, 534) put mūladravaṇa as a synonym for nīvī. It may be seen that wherever the word nīvī occurs in Indian inscriptions (e.g. in l. 1 of Ushavadāta's Nasik Cave Inscription, Epi. Ind., Vol. VIII, p. 82; in l. 26 of the Bihar Stone Pillar Inscription of Skandagupta, Fleet C.I.I., Vol. III, No. 12, p. 50; and in l. 3 of the Sanchi Stone Inscription, ibid., No. 62, p. 261), it is to be explained as "the fixed capital out of the interest (vṛddhi) on which a particular expense is to be met." In the passage in the Nāsik Inscription, we find that Ushavadāta granted 3,000 kārshāpaṇas as perpetual endowment (akshayanīvī kārshāpaṇa-sahasrāni trini) which were invested in two parts, viz. in 2,000 and 1,000 in two weavers' guilds, and it has been explicitly mentioned there that these kārshāpaṇas are not to be repaid (apadī-dātavā), their interest only to be enjoyed (vadhi-bhōjā). In the passage in the Sanchi Stone Inscription also, it is found that upāsikā Harisvāmini made a grant of 12 dīnāras as akshaya-nīvī to the Saṅgha in the great monastery of Kākanādabojā (akshaya-nīvī dattā dīnārā dvādaśa), and there also it is clearly pointed out that a bhikṣu is to be fed daily out of the interest that accrues from this endowment (śham dīnārāṇāṃ yā vṛddhir = upajā-yatē tayā divasē divasē saṅgha-madhya-praviṣṭaka = bhikṣur-ēkaḥ bhōjayitavyah). In the passage again in the Bihar Inscription of Skandagupta we read of the grant of a grāma-kṣētra (village-field) as an akshaya-nīvī (a permanent endowment). So I do not see how these passages in Indian Inscriptions can be explained at all by taking nīvī to mean a "despatch" or a "document." Moreover, the passages from the Arthaiśāstra referred to by Mr. Jayaswal can be cited in refutation of the meaning of nivi as suggested by him, for, the word there means that which remains as "net balance" after consideration of all items of receipts (āya) and payments (vyaya). If we accept the meaning proposed by him, we cannot explain the term in the following passage in the same Arthasāstra (p. 65), where Kauṭilya prescribes the various forms of punishment for scraping off, eating up and destroying the nivi (nivim—avalikkhito dviguṇah, bhakshayato=shlaguṇah, nāyatalah pañcha-bandhaḥ pratidānaḥ cha). A document cannot certainly be "eaten up." That nivi cannot mean "despatch" can also be shown by a reference to another passage in the Arthasāstra (p. 64), where we read of the samānayana (bringing together or verification) of "receipt" (āyāḥ samānayēt), of "expenditure" (vyayaḥ samānayēt) and of "net balance" (nivāḥ samānayēt). In one of the five copper-plate grants of the Gupta period discovered at Lamôdarpur in North Bengal, I mean the Plate No. 1 (to be shortly published in the Epigraphia Indica) dated 124 G. E. (=443-44 A.D.) of the reign of Kumāragupta I., it is found that the Brāhmaṇa Karppajika applies to the local Government for permission to purchase fallow (khīla) field (khētraḥ) at the usual rate prevalent in the locality and prays further that the field may be granted to him according to nivi-dharma (arhatha . . . . . nivi-dharmēṇa dātum=ūti). With regard to such passages it may safely be stated that to make a gift of land or money according to nivi-dharma is to give it on condition that the endowment is to be maintained as perpetual, and that in cases of akshaya-nivi also, the grantee could not destroy the principal, land or money, but had to make use of the income accruing from it. There is also evidence of a reversal of this process when the former grantees perhaps transferred the gift to later grantees by nivi-dharma-kshaya (cf. l. 8 of the Dhānāidaha copper-plate grant of Kumāra Gupta I.'s reign, JASB, 1909, pp. 459-61). If the meaning attached by Mr. Jayaswal to the word nivi thus fails, we cannot accept his suggestion in the same article that Prof. Hultsch's corrected reading nipista for dipista of the Aśokan Edicts may be translated as nivista in Sanskrit, meaning "reduced into document or recorded." It is also not clear why the Aśokan Inscriptions beginning with the phrase "dēvanāḥ piyē Piyadasi lāja ēvaḥ āha" are to be regarded as "Proclamations" and not "Edicts" as has hitherto been done by all scholars. An "edict" is nothing but "an order proclaimed by authority"

Let us now take up the word vināta as used in Aśoka's Rock Edict VI. Bühler translated the word by "carriage" and Senart by "retraite religieuse." Mr. Jayaswal refers to Chapter XX of the Arthasāstra on the "Duties of a King" for finding out the meaning of the word vinītamhi or vinītaḥ or vinītagpi (all in the locative case form) as used in the Aśokan Edict. He points out that according to the daily routine of duties prescribed for a king, it is found that during the seventh 'one-eighth division of a day,' i.e. towards afternoon, the king should inspect the elephants, horses, chariots and soldiers [sap-tamē hasty=aiva-rath=śrudhīyān paīyēt, p. 38]. But the other passage (p. 10) referred to by him, viz. pūrvam aharbhāgaḥ hastya=aiva-ratha-praharaṇa-vidyāsu vinayaḥ gachchēt refers not to a king but to a young prince "under training." I am afraid Mr. Jayaswal has missed the plain meaning of the latter passage which clearly means—"during the first part of the day (he) should obtain (gachchēt) instruction or training (vinayaḥ) in the arts concerning elephants (hasti-vidyā), horses (aiva-vidyā), chariots (ratha-vidyā) and weapons (praharaṇa-vidyā)." My point is that the word vinaya in this passage simply means śikṣā (training or instruction). The two passages referred to above mention of inspection of military resources and training in military arts,—this is no reason why we should take the word vinīta of the Aśokan Edict as equivalent to vinaya as used in the second passage in the Arthasāstra quoted above, and should wrongly suppose that it means "military exercise," which is never the meaning of the term vinaya. I doubt very much if any authority can be cited to prove that vinaya ever means "military exercise," as supposed by Mr. Jayaswal simply on its occurrence in a passage of which the subject-matter only is "military exercise or training," viz., hasty=śiva-ratha-praharāṇa-vidyā. Hence, the meaning of the passage in the Aśokan Edict (Rock Edict VI) cannot mean that the communicators (paṭivēdaḥas) should communicate people's business to the king even when he may be in a vinīta, i.e., even when he attends to "military exercise." But it is undoubtedly very hard to conjecture aright the meaning of the term vinīta. Sanskrit lexicographers, however, help us in ascertaining, to some extent, the meaning of the term. Amara has "vinīṭāḥ śādhuvāhināḥ"—Book II, 8, 44, i.e., well-trained horses; so has Mēdini "vinīṭaḥ suvāhṛṣṭ syāt," when used in genders other than the neuter. We have also another word vainīṭaka in Amara (= vinīṭaka of other lexicons) which means a mediate vehicle, e.g., a porter carrying a litter or a horse dragging a carriage (cf. Amara Book II, 8, 58—" paramparā-vāhanam yal = tad = vainīṭakam = astriyāṇam ). So it seems plausible that the king might have meant such a thing as a horse or a vehicle by the term vinīta in his edict. But yet we cannot be very certain about its meaning.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE STUDY OF THE ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY OF INDIA.

BY SURENDRANATH MAJUMDAR, SASTRI, M.A.; CALCUTTA.

(1) Present state of our knowledge and the pioneers in this field of research.

1. Mr. Francis Wilford, Engineer.—"A learned and laborious, but injudicious writer" (Wilson's Hindu Theatre, I. 9). His essays—on Egypt and the Nile from the Ancient Books of the Hindus; the Sacred Islands in the West; etc. (Asiatic Researches, III, IX, XIV); the Comparative Geography of India (published posthumously in 1851). His great merit was to point out the existence of Sanskrit sources of geography. His account of the Nile from Sanskrit sources enabled Lieut. J. H. Speke to discover its source. (Speke's Discovery of the Source of the Nile, chaps. I, V, X).

2. H. H. Wilson.—In 1824 he contributed to the Oriental Magazine (Vol. II, p. 180) an article in which he described a Skr. MS. professing to be a section of the Bhāṣya Purāṇa which elucidates the local geography of Bengal. In his translation of the Vishṇu Purāṇa he commented on the Purāṇic geography. His Notes on the Indica of Ctesias was published in 1836. (Oxford). The geographical portion of his Ariana Antiqua (London, 1841)—an account of the coins and antiquities discovered by Mr. Masson during his travels in Afghanistan—is full and valuable.

3. Christian Lassen.—(a) His Pentapotamia Indica (1827) gives an account of the Punjab from the "classical" sources and from the Mahābhārata, the Kośas and other Skr. sources. (b) In the geographical section of his Indische Alterthumskunde (Bonn, 1843)—the very learned and exhaustive work on the antiquities of India—he described the physical features of India and gave (especially in the footnotes) whatever information he could collect from classical and Skr. sources. Though "his system of identification is based on a wrong principle" (M'Crimble's Ptolemy, Preface, p. vii) and hence many of his identifications are wrong (Pargiter in JASB., 1895, p. 250), these works of erudition are 'precious mines of materials' utilised by later scholars.

4. Vivien de Saint-Martin, the father of the geography of Ancient India.—(a) His Étude sur la géographie et les populations primitives du Nord-ouest de l'Inde d'après les Hymnes Védiques (Paris, 1860) is the sole work on Vedic geography. Its treatment is masterly in the extreme. But as he relied solely on M. Langlois's French translation of the Rigveda—"a version which does not seem altogether to have commended itself to later interpreters"—and as much Vedic research has been done since that time, it is necessary to revise this Étude.

In his (b) Étude sur la géographie Grecque et Latine de l'Inde, et en particulier sur l'Inde de Ptolémée and (c) Mémoire Analytique sur la carte de l'Asie centrale et de l'Inde (appended to Vol. III of Julien's translation of Hwen Tsiang, 1858), he critically examined the classical and the Chinese sources. "His identifications have been made with so much care and success that a few places have escaped his research and most of these have escaped only because the imperfection or want of fulness in the maps of India rendered actual identifications quite impossible" (Cunningham's ASR., II, Preface, p. 85).

5. Sir Alexander Cunningham, the father of Indian archæology. He came to India as a "Royal Engineer." The influence of Prinsep—"the decipherer of the early Indian Alphabets"—made him to fix his eyes on the antiquities of this country. In 1861 he applied to Lord Canning to sanction an "archæological survey" which he justly showed in letter to be the only means for the reconstruction of an account of Ancient India. He was appointed the Archæological Surveyor in January 1862; but as after a few years the post was abolished, he went home and produced The Ancient Geography of India, Vol. I (1871). In it he gave a summary of the results of V. de St. Martin and Lassen revised and corrected in light of his own researches and discoveries due chiefly to his vast travels in this country—an advantage which the earlier writers did not possess. Thus he brought to a focus the then accumulated knowledge into a single English volume which is still the work to which every student of this subject has to refer to. But it must be borne in mind that—

(a) Cunningham (following St. Martin and Julien) gave in most cases the proposed restorations of foreign sounds as the Skr. names. Though nothing more than this could have then been possible, it is clear that such restoration of a Greek, Latin or Chinese transcript of an Indian proper name could not always be identical with the original one. Hence one ought to search for the original names from Indian sources and there is no doubt that they would eventually be found out. Thus Pāṇini furnishes Kāpiśi (IV. 2. 90), Sāṅkala (IV. 2. 75.), Varīu (IV. 2. 103; IV. 3. 93), Parvata (IV. 2. 143), etc.—the Sk. forms of Kapisene, Sangala, Fa-la-na, Po-lo-fo-ta, etc. [IA., Vol. I, p. 21]. Kāśikā supplies Ayomukhī (A-ye-mu-ka'). Rajatarangini mentions Udabhāṅḍapura. (Wu-to-ka-han-tu). Vinaya Texts ii, 38 and Jātaka iv, 30 supply Kajjagala (Cunningham's Kajughira). Inscription No. 14 of EI. VI shows that the Skr. form of Kong-yu-to is Koṅgoda and not Konyodha as given by Cunningham.

(b) In utilising the accounts of Fa Hian and Hwen Tsiang—undoubtedly his chief sources—he took 6 li of Hwen Tsiang as one mile and one yojana of Fa Hian to be 6.75 miles. But later researches have shed much light on this subject causing a scrutinization of his work.

(c) Cunningham usually says that Hwen Tsiang made mistakes when his evidence is not in accord with what he (Cunningham) wishes to prove. It is very easy to say that Hwen Tsiang meant East when he wrote West, or that instead of a thousand he meant a hundred. But one must not do this without any strong proof.

(d) He estimated Ptolemy's geography to be of much value (C. A. G., Preface, vii). But it is otherwise.

(e) Cunningham himself has, in his voluminous reports (ASR.) in 23 volumes (the first two only of which were written, though not published, before the publication of his Geography), embodying his researches occupying a period of more than a quarter of a century, abandoned many of the identifications stated in his Geography. And the researches of various other scholars—M'Crindle, Stein, Fleet, Smith, Watters, &c.—have shown that not only are many of his identifications doubtful but that some are positively wrong.

6. H. Yule.—His annotations on Marco Polo; his map of Ancient India from classical sources in Dr. W. Smith's Atlas of Ancient Geography (1875); etc.

7. Dr. M'Crindle, the translator of Megasthenes, Arrian, Strabo, Ptolemy, &c.—His geographical notes give a summary of 1—6.

8. Mr. Pargiter.—Geography of Rāma's Exile (JRAS., 1894), Eastern Indian Nations (JASB., 1895), Eng. translation of Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Nations at the time of the Great War (JRAS., 1908).

9. Babu Nabin Chandra Das.—Geography of Asia compiled from the Rāmāyaṇa (1896). Of no importance.

10. Nandalal Dey.—Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Medieval India. (A dictionary and not a systematic treatise. Grounds of identifications and references are generally not given.)

11. Prof. F. Pallé.—Cartography of India in the Studi Italiani di Filologia Indo-Iranica, Vols. IV & V.

12. Dr. M. Collins.—The Geographical Data of the Raghuvamśa and Daśakumāracharita.

(2) Sources of the Historical Geography of Ancient India.

1.—FOREIGN.<sup>1</sup>

(1) Classical.

Though a few references to India may be gathered from the Phœnician and Persian sources, they are not of any importance. Hence of the foreign accounts we have first to turn to that of the Greeks. Their earliest notion of the earth was that it was a flat and round disc encircled by the mighty river—Ocean. Homer and his contemporaries knew very little beyond Greece, the Archipelago, Asia Minor, Egypt, Sicily and a part of Italy. But the colonizing spirit expanded their knowledge; and the first introduction of maps, at least in Greece, and the discovery of an instrument to fix the latitude by Anaximander, a disciple of Thales, helped this expansion.

Hecataeus (500 B.C.), the first Greek geographer, knew of two continents only—Europe and Asia (a part of which was Africa). His "Survey of the World" is lost,

Herodotus (484-431 B.C.), the Father of History, was a traveller. He rejected the flat theory of the earth, but gave none of his own. He knew something of the countries from Scythia to Abyssinia and from India to the Pillars of Hercules. But "his knowledge of India was meagre and most vague. He knew that it was one of the remotest provinces of the Persian Empire towards the East; but of its extent and exact position he had no proper conception." (M'Crindle's Ancient India, p. 1). Hence though his work can be utilised as a source of history for informing us of Skylax's Voyage, etc., it contributes little towards the geography of India.

The Indika of Ktesias (398 B.C.), the royal physician of Persia, is full of old wives' tales not to be trusted.

Alexander the Great's march through the Punjab and Sindh brought, for the first time, the direct Greek knowledge of India to the banks of the Sutlej. The great invader caused the whole of India to be described by men well acquainted with it (M'Crindle's Invasion, p. 6, f. n.). Some of the eminent men of science and letters who had accompanied him wrote invaluable memoirs which are now totally lost, but they furnished materials to subsequent writers—1. Diodorus (100 B.C.—A.D. 100. He mixed history with fiction). 2. Plutarch. 3. Strabo. (60 B.C.—A.D. 19). 4. Curtius. (A.D. 100, he was 'deficient in the knowledge of Geography, Chronology and Astronomy'). 5. Arrian (A.D. 200)—the best of Alexander's historians. 6. Justinus (not later than A.D. 500). As none of these abstractors had even a very slight personal knowledge of India, their works, though based on accounts written by persons who actually visited India, are not so much invaluable for geography as for history. A little vagueness due to want of personal knowledge and a few mutual contradictions diminish not a little of their usefulness as a source of the geography of the North-Western and Western districts of India. Hence it is that a "few of the places mentioned in them have been identified with any real approach to certainty" (Fleet in IA., 1901, p. 24) and a greater number of identifications can only be made from Indian sources and not from them.

Megasthenes (305 B.C.). His long stay in the very heart of India might probably have given his work great authority in topographical matters also; but, unluckily for us, it exists only in fragments preserved as quotations. In the existing fragments we can only find out his idea of the shape of India, names of some mountains and an important but doubtful catalogue of the Indian races and tribes.

About 240 B. C. Eratosthenes, who was placed in charge of the great library established by the Ptolemies at Alexandria, brought Mathematics to his aid and laid the first foundation of a really scientific geography. Accepting the theory which is said to have originated from Thales (600 B.C.) but the credit of which ought to go to Pythagoras, he took the earth to be spherical and as lying in the centre of the universe. Though he had various errors, Sir E. Bunbury has justly pointed out that his geography is not only much nearer to the truth than that adopted by Ptolemy three centuries later, but it is actually a better approximation than was arrived at by modern geographers till about (three) centuries ago. (Hist. of Ancient Geography, Vol. I, p. 635). He described India on the authority of Alexander's historians, Megasthenes, and the Register of Statimi or Marohes.

After the lapse of about two centuries flourished Strabo (60 B.C.—A.D. 19) whose object in writing a new geography was 'to correct the earlier works in light in the increase of knowledge' due to the foundation of the mighty Roman Empire. He "did not carry us much further than Eratosthenes. Indeed in some respects he is even inferior to his predecessor." He distorted the shape of various countries. But he conceived rightly, noticed the difficulty of correctly representing a curved surface on a plane and perceived that a projection must be to some extent erroneous. As for his account of India, he himself has admitted that it cannot be absolutely true. As an apology he has pointed out the difficulty of getting correct information about India owing to its great distance and to the fact that only a few have ever visited it, that those few have visited only a part of it, and that those again were ignorant men unqualified to write an account of the places they have visited. (Strabo in M'Crindle's Ancient India, pp. 17 and 9.)

Pliny, the Naturalist, (A.D. 23-79) dealt with everything under the sun in his long array of books. Having no new theory of his own and having read (as he himself has said) more than 2,000 books, he became an industrious collector from every source. But "his love of the marvellous disposed him to accept far too readily even the most absurd fiction." He is also liable to the charge of occasional carelessness in his citation. His notices of Asia are fuller and indicate an increasing trade between Europe and the East. And the discovery, made at this time by Hippalus (a navigator who made a study of the winds of the Indian Ocean), of the periodic nature of the monsoons enabling the European navigators to take a direct route to India and not a coasting course, became a valuable aid to the commercial relations with India. The hearsay tales of these rough sailors were mixed by Pliny with the accounts of Alexander's companions and of Megasthenes in his geography of India. (VI Book of his Natural History).

The increase of trade with India created the demand of a guide-book which was produced in the form of the "Periplus of the Erythræan Sea" by an anonymous writer (first century A.D.). Erythræan sea was the whole expanse of the ocean reaching from the coast of Africa to the utmost boundary of ancient knowledge of the East. It was so called from the entrance into it by the straits of the Red Sea—the "Erythra" of the Greeks. This Periplus contains the best account of the commerce carried on from the Red Sea and the coast of Africa to the East Indies during the time that Egypt was a Roman province. It mentions river-mouths, ports, etc., with distances from one another, exports, imports, and such other details as a merchant would most value. The author of the Periplus evidently sailed in person round the coast of India. But owing to the occasional shifting of sea-side emporia, we cannot now expect to find every place on the coast mentioned by him. As to inland details, he was not correct. Thus he placed Paithan at a distance of twenty days' journey to the south of Barygaza while it is 200 miles to the south-east of it. Thus we cannot trust it as a geographical source for inland knowledge, though we can take its mention of commercial products to be true.

The greatest figure of this period—Ptolemy, whose name marks the highest pitch of perfection in early geography. Klaudios Ptolemaios who flourished in Alexandria (circa A.D. 150) was a musician, mathematician, astronomer and geographer. His work on geography is a sequel to his great "Almagest." It is not a descriptive geography like that of Strabo, but is exclusively a mathematical or coemical one. His object was to correct and reform the map of the world. So he explained the geometrical principles of geography and pointed out that the only scientific basis on which a map could be constructed must be made on astronomical observations. Hence in describing places he gives their longitudes (calculated from Ferro in the Canaries) and latitudes (parallel of Rhodes). These scientific features are the causes of his wide celebrity. But his system has many defects:—

(1) He placed the equator at a considerable distance from its true geographical position and vitiated his Eastern longitudes by about seven degrees.

(2) He took every degree of latitude and of longitude measured at the equator as equal to 500 stadia instead of 600 stadia (or 60 geographical miles). And thus if he had arrived at the conclusion that two places were 5000 stadia from each other, he would place them at a distance of ten degrees apart and thus, in fact, separate them by an interval of 6000 stadia.

(3) As only a few astronomical observations were made in his time, he had to rely (and specially so in the case of India of which he had not even the slightest personal observation) upon second-hand information—reports of travellers, navigators and works of previous writers.

(4) In general shape his countries are narrowed at the north and enormously extended as they approach the south; so that the eastern parts of Asia are carried a long way beyond their true distance from Europe and Africa.

(5) As the result of the above defects, the shape of India is utterly distorted in his map. His results would place Paithan in the Bay of Bengal, make Ceylon an enormous island, make the Ganges flow into the sea somewhere near Canton, make the Mahānadi river run over Siam and Cambodia, carry Pāṭaliputra to the east of a line from Tonquin to Peking, etc.

Thus we see that unless we have a thorough adjustment of Ptolemy's results for India, it is with but little confidence that we can use it with only our present means of applying information given in it towards reconstructing the geography and political divisions of Ancient India.

It is needless to mention the other classical writers [translated by M'Crindle in his Ancient India], though they supply some historical information, they do little more than mentioning a few distorted Indian geographical names without the specification of any distance or direction. Nor was the old classical culture destined to live long after Ptolemy and the author of Peutinger Tables (A.D. 222).

(2) Early Christian.

The spread of Christianity ruined the old "pagan" culture. The Hebrew theory of flat earth surrounded by the ocean and having massive pillars at the edges on which the heaven rests like a roof banished the Greek spheroidal view. While the old classical structure was undermined, little was done to further any knowledge. The only work of this period in which we have any interest is The Christian Topography of the Universe [M'Crindle's translation of the complete work published by the Hakluyt Society, 1897] by the Egyptian monk Cosmas, nicknamed Indicopleustes (Indian traveller), who travelled from Egypt to India and Ceylon (A.D. 547). Reviling the impious old pagans for their spheroidal view, he depicts the world in his map—the earliest Christian map—as a flat rectangular island surrounded by the sea beyond which are other regions. He had no idea of what geography is and his work contributed little to the historical geography of India. All that we can learn from him is the name of certain western and South Indian places and their trade.

(3) Arabic.

As Arabic enterprise extended their commercial relations far beyond the limits of Ptolemy's world, their knowledge was wider than his and far sounder for many regions in the east and south (Eastern Asia, Africa). In geography, as in astronomy, they had worked on the old Greek lines, but on them they had built up their own structures by independent researches on mathematical calculations and reports of travellers. But Arabic geography never got beyond a certain point. It never threw up a truly great writer like Strabo or Ptolemy. What they did was to preserve the Greek traditions and to improve it, while Europe was degrading into barbarism owing to ecclesiastical authority. "Men like Massoudy (A.D. 956), Alberuni or Edrisi (11th century) had a better and more adequate conception than any Christian before A.D. 1300. The construction of maps and globes reached a considerable proficiency in their hand while the Christian ones are almost ridiculous." Besides the above writers, Sulaiman (A.D. 851), Abu Zaid (A.D. 916), Ibn Kurdadba (A.D. 912), Al Itakhri (A.D. 951) and Alkazwini (A.D. 1275) have written about India. But the distortion of Indian names in their works perplexes much. Alberuni's knowledge of Sanskrit enabled him to give a transcript as faithful as the use of the Semitic alphabet allowed him. But his geographical account of India is not a new account; it is mainly a synopsis [chaps. 25, 29] of the Hindu accounts—Bhuvana-kośa and Kūrmavibhāga. He has only added a few notes on them. His original contribution [chap. 18] is the account of 16 itineraries which seem to have been communicated to him by the military and civil officers of Mahmūd. Here he mentions directions and distances in farsakh (= 3½ miles approx.) [Ibn Batuta in Sindh, JRAS., 87, p. 401 ff. and a map in 1889; Rashiduddin's geographical notices of India—Col. Yule in JRAS., 1869-70, p. 340 ff.].

(4) Chinese.

Having discovered the use of magnet as early as the third century A.D., the Chinese could make extensive sea-voyages. They are even alleged to have discovered what is now known as the North America in A.D. 500 (Beazly's Dawn of Modern Geography, pp. 489-90; 493). The conversion of this nation into Buddhism which was introduced into their country in A.D. 67 caused a series of pilgrims to visit India—the land of Buddha—and write invaluable accounts of it.

As the Greeks and the early Arabs visited India either in the track of some invader or as merchants, their accounts chiefly inform us of the military glories of nations or of kings little known or altogether unknown in Indian literature which is deficient in the historical sense, or of the trades of places which have long ago been deserted or buried in the silts of rivers and are no longer remembered. Hence though these sources give much information, they do not contribute much to the study of geography. Rather it requires much research to elucidate these foreign accounts.

But the case is different with the Chinese. These pilgrims, saturated with Indian ideas, visited their holy land and described the sacred monuments of places which have been immortalized in Sanskrit or Pali literature, some of which still retain their celebrity, while the ruins of some others still exist enabling us to understand their Chinese description. This fact explains the importance of the Chinese sources.

Of the various Chinese accounts, those of Sung-Yen and Hui Seng (A.D. 600; translated in Beal's Records from the Western World, Vol. 1; and in Bull. de l'Ecole Fr d'Extrême Orient, Hanoi, 1903) and of O-Kung (A.D. 800; translated in the Journal Asiatique, 1895) are very short, describing a few places of North-Western India (Kabul Valley, the Punjab and Kashmir).

Itsing landed at Tāmralipti, the then port on the Bay of Bengal, in A.D. 673 and visited Nālandā, Gṛidhrakūṭa, Buddhagayā, Vaiśālī, Kuśinagara, Kapilavāstu, Srāvastī, the Deerpark, Cock Mountain, and left India from Tāmralipti. [Translated by Dr. Takakusu, C. P. S. Oxford, 1896.]

Still more important are the accounts of Fa-Hian (A.D. 399-414) and Hwen Tsiang (A.D. 629-45) or Yüan-chwang (as Mr. Watters prefers to spell it). Fa-Hian entered India from the North-West, travelled over the whole of the Āryāvarta and left it at the port of Tāmralipti. His record (Fo-Kue-Ki) is truthful, clear and straight-forward. Though a devout Buddhist, he was a sensible and not often a hysterical pilgrim-traveller. The earlier part of his work is strictly geographical. But when he reached India, religion had the better of his geography. Still his geographical notices are valuable for their precision, as he generally fixed the position of every place that he visited by its bearing and distance from that which he left.

Yüan Chwang also entered India from the North-West, travelled though the whole of it and left it by the same route. His records—Si-Yu-Ki—are fuller than even that of Fa-Hian and it is almost impossible to exaggerate their importance.

In utilising materials from these sources a student should note that:—

I. In giving the direction of a place from another Fa-Hian mentions only the four principal cardinal points. [Hence his E. may mean NE. or SE.; and so with the other points.] Yüan Chwang also generally does the same; and very seldom does he give the direction as due NE., etc. But still there are other points of the compass beyond these eight.

II. (a) In stating the distance of a place from another, Fa-Hian states it in the yojana and Yüan Chwang in the yojana and the li measure. Dividing the known-distance-in-miles by the number of yojanas which the distance covers according to these pilgrims, Cunningham asserted that a yojana of Yüan Chwang is 6.75 miles while that of Fa-Hian is 6.71 miles.

Mr. V. Smith takes a yojana of Yüan Chwang to be 6.5 miles and one of Fa-Hian to be 7.25 miles.

M. Julien and probably Dr. Stein take 8 miles as equal to one yojana of Yüan Chwang, while in the opinion of Mr. Giles a yojana of Fa-Hian varies from 5 to 9 miles.

Now Yüan Chwang has himself stated (Watters, Vol. I, p. 141.2) that a yojana is a day's march for a Royal army; that there are three kinds of yojanas of 16 li (found in Sacred Writings), of 30 li (common reckoning in India and of 40 li (old Chinese account). He has also stated that a yojana consisted of eight krośas (a krośa being originally the distance that the lowing of a cow can be heard). He has also given figures to change a krośa into "bows", "cubits", "figures" and "barley-corns." Making calculations from these materials Fleet tried to prove that there were three kinds of yojanas:— I. Magadha yojana (used by the Buddhists) of 16000 hastas or 4.54 miles; II. General yojana of 32000 hastas or 9.09 miles; III. A third yojana (which was according to Yüan Chwang 1½ of the general yojana) of 12.12 miles. This third yojana was, according to Fleet, the original yojana (from yuj, to yoke)—the yoking distance—the distance along which a pair of bullocks could draw a fully laden cart. This yojana was taken by the Chinese pilgrims as equal to 100 "li"s. [JRAS., 1906, p. 1011.]

In making the above calculations Fleet took a hasta =  $\frac{1}{2}$  yard. But Major Vost has shewn from Medieval and Ancient Chinese and other sources that the hasta was formerly taken to be a little larger than is done now. [JRAS., 1903, p. 65.] Hence taking his calculations the three yojanas will be—I. 5.288 miles or 5.3 miles very nearly; II. 10.6 miles very nearly; III. 14.2 miles very nearly.

Thus 100 "li"s or a yojana denoted the distance occupied in making a day's journey. The said day's journey averaged very closely about fourteen miles. But being actually determined in each case by such considerations as the nature of the country traversed and the distance between the villages, sārais and other convenient halting places, it might easily be anything from twelve to sixteen miles and in exceptional cases might have even a wider range in either direction.

II. (b) Again, as Fa-Hian gives distances in yojanas only and not in fractions of it, his one yojana may be any distance more than  $\frac{1}{2}$  yojana and less than  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yojanas. Yüan Chwang also uses round numbers, such as 500 "li"s, 600 "li"s, etc. Hence we may allow a certain margin and take his 500 "li"s as any distance above 450 and below 550 "li"s. Thus the distances of both the Chinese pilgrims can be taken only as approximations.

II. (c) Yüan Chwang's dimensions of various countries are generally taken to be exaggerations. It became a common practice of Cunningham to take his thousands as hundreds. But as Yüan Chwang has not stated these details in the decimal system of notation, he is not justified to do so. Nor can we condemn his details of this kind in general terms without considering how they can be applied. For as he usually stated these details in thousands of "li"s any one of them may be 50 miles too great or too little. Again re-entering angles may increase a perimeter very considerably, while reducing the area inside it. Conventional ideas as to the size of a country may also have caused some errors in his details. [JRAS., 1907, p. 641 ff.]

III. As the names of a country and its capital are sometimes identical [and even when not identical Yüan Chwang has not mentioned them both] and as Yüan Chwang has not always precisely stated whether by a certain place-name he means a capital or a country, the distances and directions given by him cannot precisely be traced on the map, though the best way would be to take them as from each capital to the next one.

IV. The peculiarity of Chinese phonetics caused Yüan Chwang to insert vowels between Skr. conjuncts and to use "k" for Skr. k, kh, g, gh; ch for Skr. ch, chh, j, jh; t for ṭh, ḍ, ḍh, ṣ, ṣr; t for ḍ, ṭ, ṭh, ḍ, ḍh; p for p, ph, b, bh; l for r, l; f for b and v. Hence the difficulty in finding out the true Skr. form.

V. Again cases of discrepancy between the "Records" and the "Life" and some apparent mutual contradictions and a few various readings show that the writings of Yüan Chwang have not been correctly transmitted to us.

We thus see that even the very best of the foreign sources are not fully satisfactory and though the results arrived at from them are of great value, they cannot be taken as anything more than mere approximations.

The Chinese source also includes various notes on India—in the Chinese histories and specially in the Chinese translations of Indian works—translated by M. Sylvain Lévi and other scholars.

MISCELLANEA.

'SATIYAPUTA' IN THE ROCK-EDICT II
OF AŚOKA.

Scholars have been much exercised as to the identification of the Satiyaputa (Satyaputra) kingdom. Sir R. G. Bhandarkar<sup>1</sup> would place it near Poona on the strength of the existence of Satpute families in that district. Bühler<sup>2</sup> identifies the Satyaputras with the Satvata. Mr. V. A. Smith<sup>3</sup> would look for them in the Tuluva country or in Satyamangalam in the Western Ghāṭs.

The various versions of the Edict may now be examined:—

(1) Choḍā Pāḍā Satiyaputo Ketalaputo & Tambapāṇi Amtiyako Yona rājā.—(Girnar).

(2) [Cho]ḍa Paṇḍiya Satiyaputra Keralaputra-Tambapāṇi Amtiyoko nama Yona rāja.—(Shāh-ḍāpurāḥ).

(3) [Choda] Paṇḍiya Satiya [putr.] Keralaputr [e] . . . bapapi . . . tiyoko nama Yona.—(Manasāra).

(4) Choḍā Paṇḍiā Satiyaputo Kelalaputo Tambapāṇi (Am)tiyoko nāma Yonālājā.—(Kāśī).<sup>4</sup>

It is clear from the above that the correct form of the name is Satyaputra and that the kingdom or people who went by that name must have had its seat somewhere in South India. Aśoka says that among the nations and princes mentioned above, who were his neighbours, he founded two kinds of hospitals—hospitals for men as well as for animals. No evidence has been adduced for the view that Satyaputra may be the Tuluva country. It is therefore satisfactory to note that Mr. Smith has abandoned this view. To his new identification of the place with Satyamangalam the objection is that there is no evidence of that place having been the seat of a kingdom or people in Aśoka's time or far later. Nor is there any evidence to connect Aśoka with the Satvata.

We may compare the data of the Aśoka edict with those found in Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya which is admitted on all hands to belong to the middle of the second century B.C.—i.e., less than a century after Aśoka. Patañjali<sup>5</sup> mentions Pāṇḍya, Chola, and Chera kingdoms along with Kāśchīpura. Satyaputra is conspicuous by omission, as Kāśchīpuram is in the Aśoka edict. One may be inclined to ask whether the one name could be identified with the other.

On the Buddhist side there are traditions of Kāśchīpura having been a flourishing city in Aśoka's time. Yüan Chwang<sup>6</sup> mentions these traditions as current in his day. He says that Aśoka built stūpas there, one of them being 100 feet in height, and that the city was the birth-place of Bodhisattva Dharmapāla. Even to-day we find unmistakeable evidence of ancient Baudhha vestiges in Kāśchīpuram.<sup>7</sup>

There is very strong evidence that the country round Kāśchīpuram was known as Satyavrata Kshetram. In the Meḷupāka grant<sup>8</sup> of Mahādeva Sarasvatī we read Satyavrata nāmāṅkita Kāśchī Dirya Kshetra (line 6). The same term is used in the Guruparamparā of the Śaṅkarāchārya Maṭha as well as in that of Pimpalagiya Pillai, three generations from the great Rāmānujāchārya. The statement of Yüan Chwang that the country round Kāśchī was the Drāviḍa country, as distinct from the Chola, may be taken along with the tradition embodied in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa that Satyavrata was the lord of Drāviḍa.

It may thus be established that the Pāṇḍya, Chola, Keralaputra and Satyaputra kingdoms of the Aśoka Rock Edict II correspond respectively to the Pāṇḍya, Chola, Kerala, and Kāśchī of Patañjali. Satyaputra was the name of the country or people having Kāśchīpuram for its capital.

INSCRIPTIONS ON TWO PATNA STATUES IN THE INDIAN MUSEUM.

BY RAMAPRASAD CHANDA, B.A.; SIMLA.

VISITORS to the Bharhut Gallery of the Indian Museum are familiar with the two big Patna Statues presented to the Asiatic Society of Bengal so long ago as 1820. These statues have been described by Cunningham in his Report, Vol. XV, pp. 1-3. Both these statues are in the round and "are made of grey sandstone which has been highly polished like all edict-bearing pillars and statues of the time of Asoka." About the position and date of the inscriptions Cunningham writes, "A broad scarf crosses the left shoulder to the right hip, hanging down in a loop in front of the breasts, and in a long train behind. The folds of the scarf are marked by deep parallel lines, between which, at the back of each figure, there is a short inscription. At first I thought that the statues might be of the age of Asoka; but the forms of the letters show that they must be of a later date, somewhere about the beginning of the Christian era." Some of the letters of these inscriptions "are doubtful owing to the deeply cut parallel folds of the scarves on which they are engraved." Cunningham thus reads the records:—

A. *Yakhe Sanatananda.*B. Yakhe Achusanigika.

Recently these short epigraphs have been made the subject of special study by Mr. Jayaswal, who, on the strength of these records, proposes to recognise in these statues the portraits of two Śaiśunāka kings, Udayin and Nandi Vardhana, in an article entitled Statues of two Śaiśunāka Emperors (483-409 B.C.) in the Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society, Vol. V, pp. 88-106. Mr. Jayaswal starts with the assumption that the inscriptions are contemporaneous with the statues. He writes:—

"After a long scrutiny I came to the conclusion that the letters had been carved before the parallel lines to denote the folds on the scarf were chiselled. I consulted Mr. Arun Sen, Lecturer in Indian Art to the University of Calcutta, on the point, and he confirmed my view. The fold-lines have continued in spite of the letters. Over the letters they have been delicately handled; while the symmetry of the lines have been kept on, the forms of the letters have not been interfered with, the original strokes of the letters being scrupulously avoided and kept separate." (pp. 90-91.)

The last statement is not correct as the plate will show even in accordance with Mr. Jayaswal's own reading of the records. In A (his b) the base line of the triangular lower parts of kha and va has not been kept separate and in B (his a) the base line of n of ni and the letter that he recognises as Śaiśunāka dh has been interfered with. The more reasonable view seems to be that the scarves with the folds marked by lines were modelled first and the letters were engraved by a different hand sometime after the statues had been finished. The method followed by Mr. Jayaswal in deciphering the short inscriptions is thus explained by him:—

"The letters, however, which Cunningham had declared to be later than Asoka, presented to me a wonderful problem. They did not fully tally with characters of any period yet known to Indian Epigraphy. While one letter, n, at first appeared to belong to a later age, all others disclosed forms more archaic than the oldest known Brāhmī characters. The archaism was so marked that four letters, afterwards identified as bh, dh, ś and s appeared to be new forms. To them value could be assigned only on presuming them to be ancestors of such Asokan letters to which the latter can be carried back on principles of epigraphic evolution." (p. 90.)

Characters that do not tally with characters of any period yet known, that is to say, are unknown, cannot be necessarily considered archaic. An unknown thing cannot be recognised as archaic until its affinity to something that is known to be archaic is established. The principles of epigraphic evolution cannot be very different from the principles of organic evolution. In the organic world if points of similarity are noticed in the structures of two species of animals, the species with the less developed structure is either recognised as the ancestor of the species with more developed structure, or both the species are traced to a hypothetical common ancestor. So two known quantities are necessary for postulating an unknown third, either as an intermediate form or a common source. The process of evolution of an isolated species whether in the organic or in the epigraphic world cannot be traced backward with the assistance of imagination only.

The theory regarding the origin of Brāhmī lipi that now holds the field is that of Bühler according to which it is derived from the oldest form of North Semitic alphabet which was introduced into India by traders about 800 B.C. But this theory is not universally accepted. Cunningham never subscribed to it. Another eminent authority, Fleet, suggests that either the oldest Semitic alphabet and the Brāhmī lipi "were derived from a joint original source," or Hindus "were the independent inventors of that which was emphatically their national alphabet."<sup>1</sup> The relationship between certain Brāhmī letters and old Semitic letters is undeniable, and I prefer the first alternative proposed by Fleet to the second. But even if we accept the latter view and altogether ignore Semitic forms in our investigation of the origins of the Mauryan Brāhmī alphabet it is impossible to recognise the letters of the Patna image inscriptions as fifth century (B.C.) predecessors of the third century B.C. forms without independent evidence. Not only has Mr. Jayaswal failed to offer any independent evidence to prove his case, but his statement that the characters used in these two short records do not "fully tally with characters of any period known to Indian epigraphy" appears to be absolutely wrong. I hope to show that the characters of the epigraphs under discussion nearly fully tally with the Brāhmī characters of the Kushan period.

A

Cunningham—Yakhe Sanatananda.

Jayaswal—Sapa (Shapa ?)—Khate (Khete ?) Vaja (Veja ?) Nandi. (p. 95).

(1) Mr. Jayaswal's Sapa or shapa is a clear Ya of the Kushan period with equal verticals, and an angular right limb and a semi-circular left limb (  ). Cunningham reads the letter correctly and any one can easily recognise it from the good facsimile published with Mr. Jayaswal's article.

(2) Mr. Jayaswal's method is best illustrated by his remarks on the second (his third) letter. He agrees with Cunningham in reading it as kh. Like kh in the inscriptions of the time of the Kushan kings and in the Girnar inscription of Rudradaman it consists of a triangle with a hook turned to the left (  ). Quite oblivious of this Mr. Jayaswal writes, "The third letter, kh, again, has an older feature. The body is formed of four lines, which becomes round or tends to disappear in Asoka's time." (p. 94.) I do not see the medial e with Kā and so I read the two first letters as Yakha (Yaksha).

(3) The third letter which Cunningham reads as sa and Mr. Jayaswal as ta is a doubtful one. Its left leg is a little curved like the left leg of a sa, but its right leg looks more like the right leg of ea. With Cunningham provisionally I propose to read this letter as sa.

(4) Cunningham's reading of this letter as va does not seem to be correct. It looks like a va of the type met with in the inscriptions of the Kshatrapas and the Kushans with triangular lower part. The two side strokes are not curvish, as stated by Mr. Jayaswal (p. 94), but straight. The longish vertical above is probably superscript r.

(5) No wide difference of opinion is possible with regard to the reading of the last three letters. The na with curved base-line is Kushan in type; but d of di is archaic. So the inscription may be read:—

Yakha Sa (?) ratanavādi.

The figure has the remnant of a chauri (fly-whisk) on its shoulder. Though the reading of the name is doubtful, there can be no doubt that when this short epigraph was engraved the figure was recognised as the image of an attendant Yaksha.

B

Cunningham—Yakhe Achusanigika.

Jayaswal—Bhage Acho chhon'dhiie.

(1-2) Cunningham appears to be wrong in reading the first two letters as Yakhe. These two letters were evidently engraved after scraping off the lines that marked the folds in this part of the scarf and the first two letters were engraved on the clear space. The scraping was then discontinued and the other letters engraved over the lines. Mr. Jayaswal takes the first sign as bha (  ). We come across three types of bha in the Mauryan and later inscriptions—. Mr. Jayaswal writes about the first sign of our inscription "The upward projection of the top line as it appears in Asokan bh is not present here. That is a later evolution." (p. 91.) In support of this view Mr. Jayaswal lays down the doctrine of the derivation of the Asokan letter "that tends to be done in two strokes" from letter "written in three strokes." I place below the sign in question, No. 1, side by side with Asokan and post-Maurya bhas, Nos. 2-4.

1.  2.  3.  4.

A comparison of No. 1 with Nos. 2-3 makes it self-evident that more strokes are necessary for writing the latter signs than the former. I would like to take No. 1 as an incomplete bha. The next letter is a round ga. Angular ga (  ) is met with in the inscriptions of the third and the second centuries B.C., and round ga in later epigraphs.<sup>1</sup> The letters that follow bha (?) ga that are larger in size and engraved over the lines of the scarf appear to be the work of another hand and may not be connected with these two letters. What the engraver intended to incise was probably bhagavad, "the blessed one."

(3) The a with space between the arms is not an old form as Mr. Jayaswal asserts but a late form.<sup>2</sup>

(4) It may be chu or cha.

(5) This letter is a chha of the butterfly type met with in Brāhmī inscriptions from the first century B.C. onward.<sup>3</sup>

(6) Mr. Jayaswal is right in taking it as ni.

(7) Cunningham is wrong in taking this sign as g, for an angular ga is out of place in such a late record. But it is not "a new form" as Mr. Jayaswal asserts (p. 92), but a triangular v of the Kushan period.

(8) As Mr. Jayaswal himself admits, this letter looks like a ka of the Gupta period. Such ka with curved arms is also met with in the Kushan records. Mr. Jayaswal thus states his objections to recognising this sign as ka: "The absence of seraph (?) serif and the lower flourish together with the number of strokes would dislodge that proposal." (p. 93.) The absence of serif is due to the fact that the top of the letter merges in the line of the scarf. All these letters are very carelessly engraved in a place where there is no room for giving them finishing touches. So the letters following: bhā(?)ga may be read as—

Achachhantika.

Achachha may be taken as achchha — aksha(ya). Niv or nvi also means 'capital', 'principal', 'stock'. So aksha(ya)niśka probably means 'the owner of inexhaustible capital', evidently denoting Vaiśravaṇa, the King of Yakshas.

The inscriptions on these two Patna statues therefore show that about the second century A.D. they were recognised as the images of two Yakshas, Sa(?)rvaṭanaṃdi and Vaiśravaṇa. The humbler rank of Yaksha Sa(?)rvaṭanaṃdi is indicated by the remnant of the chauri and the superior rank of Akshayanivika by the more elaborate armlet.

Epigraphy is not the only ground on which Mr. Jayaswal assigns these statues to the fifth century B.C. Plastic considerations have also been requisitioned for the purpose. The main argument under this head is an argumentum ad hominem, the opinion of Mr. Arun Sen, who declared the statues "on art considerations to be pre-Mauriyan" even before the data of inscriptions were disclosed to him. (p. 95.) What these art considerations are we hope to hear some day from Mr. Sen himself. Mr. Jayaswal has, however, noted one of these:—

"The general vigour and realism of the statues make one assign a pre-Mauriyan period to the monuments. The decadence which marks the imperial art of Aśoka does not even begin in the statues. Mr. Sen had not to think long in declaring them emphatically "Pre-Mauriyan! Without doubt." Yet the statues prove a previous history of the art of the Indian sculptor." (p. 105.)

Every object indicates a previous history. Even a chipped stone proves a long, long, previous history for the race of the fashioner of that rude implement. The only known specimens of the "imperial art of Aśoka" are the capital of the edict-bearing monolithic columns. What are the signs of decadence according to Mr. Jayaswal that mark these magnificent sculptures as compared to our Patna statues? Is it a lack of "general vigour and realism?" As regards realism I doubt very much whether any one who has seen the capitals of the Aśokan columns in the vestibule, and the two statues in the neighbouring gallery, of the Indian Museum, can agree with Mr. Jayaswal. "Vigour" is something more subtle. But it is well-known that others who have also made special study of Indian art admire the vigour of the animals of the Aśokan capitals. To this writer the Patna statues seem quite lifeless as compared to the lions, and particularly the reliefs, on the abacus of the Sarnath Capital of the Aśoka column. If the decadence of vigour and realism is to be recognised as criterion of age, the Patna statues should be assigned to post-Mauriyan rather than to pre-Mauriyan period.

Therefore, both on epigraphic and plastic considerations, it appears very difficult to subscribe to the following statement in the Annual Report of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society, 1918:— "These monuments are now proved to be amongst the oldest royal statues in Asia and Europe and stand amongst the greatest historical treasures of the World." It will be a pity to remove these two Yakshas, though hailing from Patna, from the company of their kith and kin on the Bharhut rail.

ALLEGED SAISUNAGA STATUES.

BY R. C. MAJUMDAR, M.A., Ph.D.; CALCUTTA.

IN the Bharhut gallery of the Indian Museum, Calcutta, are preserved two remarkable statues, which, as the label on the pedestal informs us, were originally found at Patna. Although Buchanan discovered them there as early as 1812, they excited little curiosity or interest, till, by some chance a few months ago, they attracted the attention of the assiduous scholar Mr. K. P. Jayaswal. About the end of January last, Mr. Jayaswal showed me the short inscriptions which are incised on the fold of the scarf just below the shoulders on the back of the statues and explained their bearing upon the identity of these. He has since elaborated his ideas in a paper contributed to the JBORS., March 1919, wherein, on the basis of his reading of the inscriptions, he maintains that the statues represent two Saisunaga Emperors, viz., Udayin and Nandivardhana.

The very great importance of this conclusion is sufficient excuse for a further treatment of the subject. When Mr. Jayaswal first communicated his views to me, I expressed my doubts about their validity on palæographic considerations; for I was of opinion that the letters of the inscriptions could not be earlier than the Kushan period. As we could not agree on this point, I waited for his forthcoming article which was to contain an elaborate exposition of his views. As soon as this was published I applied to Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar, the officer in charge of the Archæological section of the Indian Museum, for good impressions of the two inscriptions. With his usual courtesy he not only supplied them to me but also afforded me facilities for reading the inscriptions in the original along with him.

Thus equipped I began to study the subject afresh, and elaborated my conclusions in the form of an article ready for the press. Before, however, it was actually sent for publication, I came to learn that Babu Ramaprasad Chanda was also engaged in studying the inscriptions. We compared notes, and found to our agreeable surprise that we had both come to the same conclusion regarding the probable age of the characters. In view of the startling theories advanced by Mr. Jayaswal, the correct determination of the period to which the inscriptions belong, came to be the most vital problem in connection with the statues on which they occur. The perfect agreement on this point between Mr. Chanda and myself seems to me to be a substantial step in our gradual advance towards the final solution of the problem. The very fact that we had both worked out independently to the same conclusion, which was upheld by Cunningham long ago, goes a great way in demolishing the heavy structure so laboriously built up by Mr. Jayaswal. This, in itself, is no small gain, for it will considerably narrow the issues and make the proper understanding of the record a much easier task than before.

I now proceed to set forth my grounds for maintaining, in common with Mr. Chanda, that Mr. Jayaswal's estimate of the age of the letters is highly untenable.

"The letters," says Mr. Jayaswal, "presented to me a wonderful problem. They did not fully tally with characters of any period yet known to Indian Epigraphy. The archaism was so marked that four letters, afterwards identified as dh, dh, s and s, appeared to me to be new forms. To them value could be assigned only on presuming them to be ancestors of such Aśokan letters to which the latter can be carried back on principles of epigraphic evolution" (p. 90).

— It thus appears that the central pivot of Mr. Jayaswal's theory is the assumption that the letters did not fully tally with characters of any known period. This seems to be the capital mistake which has vitiated all his conclusions. For anyone who looks at the inscription on the statue without the head cannot fail to recognise the familiar squat Kushan letters y, kh and n. To remove all doubts, the first, second and sixth letters may be compared with the figures represented in Bühler's palæographic chart Tafel III, 1v-31, III-8, III-25. Mr. Jayaswal seems to have failed to notice this, and, instead of trying to read the letters by the similarity they possess with the characters of the Kushan period, he has been guided by the preconceived principle, laid down by himself, that they represent earlier forms from which the Aśokan characters have been derived. The result is, that he has been faced with archaism where there is really none, and assigned value to "new forms" in consideration of their being imaginary prototypes of certain Aśokan characters, whereas they are really well known forms of characters of a later period. Let me take a characteristic example, viz., the first letter in the inscription No. 1. Mr. Jayaswal remarks:—"The first letter is taken to be bh. The upward projection of the top line as it appears in Aśokan bh is not present here. That is a later evolution." (p. 91.) Thus he imagines it to be a prototype of Aśokan bh although no such form has ever been known. The defect of such argument is obvious. For one might similarly suggest that the letter is a prototype of Aśokan b, the base line being a later evolution. As a matter of fact there is no need to indulge in these speculations, for the letter may very well be taken as an angular g of a later period.

No useful purpose will be served by criticising in this manner the value of each letter ascertained by Mr. Jayaswal on his proto-Mauryan theory. It rests on the assumption that "the characters of the inscription do not fully tally with those of any period yet known to Indian Epigraphy" and must stand or fall along with it. I shall, therefore, next attempt to show that the characters really belong to the second or third century of the Christian era, and if I succeed in doing this, no further argument will be needed to prove that Mr. Jayaswal's position is an untenable one.

The statues which contain the inscriptions were, as already observed, found at Patna, and it may be fairly presumed that they originally belonged to that place or its immediate neighbourhood.<sup>1</sup> The locality of the inscriptions, thus ascertained, is an important factor, for while, generally speaking, the Kushan inscriptions represent the alphabet of Northern India in the second or third century of the Christian era, we must not lose sight of the fact that, more correctly speaking, they merely represent its western variety. The existence of an eastern variety is conclusively proved by the Allahabad Inscription of Samudra Gupta; for if one compare its letters with those of a later date but belonging to the western parts, e.g., the Indore copperplate of Skandagupta, the latter will be seen to possess greater affinity with the Kushan letters. Take, for instance, the letters g and l. The g of the Indore plate is a curve like that of the Kushan inscriptions, but in Allahabad inscription we already meet with the complete angular form. The l of the Indore plate also closely resembles the Kushan character, but that in the Allahabad inscription is quite different, inasmuch as the base line is entirely omitted and the left hook is attached directly to the right vertical line. These peculiarities must therefore be ascribed to an eastern variety and if we meet with them in our inscriptions it will be readily explained by their locality. It would further follow, that the letters in a Patna inscription of the second or third century A.D., while retaining general resemblance with Kushan characters, may also exhibit those peculiarities or tendencies which we meet with in the Allahabad inscription.

Chanda :— Bha (?) ga Achachha niofka.

Cunningham's reading of the first two letters has been dismissed as improbable by both Mr. Jayaswal and Mr. Chanda, and it may be at once conceded that the two letters, as they appear to us at present, can scarcely be read as ya khe. There are, however, one or two small points which may be considered in this connection. In the first place, the two letters are considerably smaller than the others, and secondly, the space which they occupy is peculiar in this respect, that it does not contain the deeply cut parallel folds which appear on its right as well as on its left. It is thus certain that the space has been rubbed over and polished, and if this has taken place after Cunningham's time it is just possible that the two letters are really fragments of what was visible to him. Now it is indeed curious that if we cut off the lower portion of the letters ya khe there will remain something very nearly approaching to what we have at present.  The eye copy of the inscriptions which accompanies Cunningham's reading shows the full form of y and kh and it is difficult to suppose that anyone could have drawn such a sketch unless he had before him something very different from what meets the eye at present. In these circumstances I cannot dismiss Cunningham's reading offhand, but commend it to the attention of the scholars.

As it is, the first letter seems to be an angular form of g though the top stroke still retains the curvilinear form. It may be compared with the first variety of g in Allahabad inscription. (Bühler's Chart Plate IV, I.9).

The second letter may be read as te. The top stroke of t is faint but just where it begins the reverse shows something like a dot, which denotes the starting point of the letter, as is the case with all other letters in the inscription.

The third letter at first sight looks like α, and I was also inclined to read it as such. It appeared, however, on a closer examination, that whereas in known letters of this type, the two hooks on the left, although separate, are close to each other, branching off from some points in the middle of the vertical stroke, in the present case they are widely apart, being joined almost to the two extremities of the vertical strokes.<sup>3</sup> Secondly, in known cases, the lower hook slants downwards but the hook in our letter has an upward direction. So I now read it as le. Omitting the upper hook, the letter approximates most closely to the i of the Allahabad inscription. Similar occurs in other Gupta inscriptions in Eastern India although later inscriptions from the western parts of the country retain the Kushana form (cf. Bühler's Tables). It would appear, therefore, as already observed, that this was a peculiarity of the eastern parts. The upper hook denotes the conjunct e or i. Numerous instances of the use of this form along with the regular e stroke occur in the Hathigumpha inscription of Khāravela (cf. for example che in Cheta rāia (I. 1), le in lekharupa (I. 2), and se in rdjavase (I. 3), in the plate facing p. 472 of JBORS., December 1917). But similar stroke denotes i in Kuda Cave inscription (Bühler's Tafel III, XV-33).

The fourth letter is ch. Mr. Jayaswal rightly observes that this is composed of three strokes whereas the Aśokan ch is made up of only two strokes. He fails to notice, however, that this is the characteristic of later ch, and is led to remark:—"The only exception to this in Aśoka chs is the third specimen at Girnar which is the nearest approach to our ch, in the whole range of Indian Epigraphy." (p. 92). The fact is, however, that our letter has a far more striking resemblance to the third specimen of Kushana ch represented in Bühler's Tafel.

The next letter is chna. Here again, Mr. Jayaswal has rightly remarked that our letter consists of three strokes while the Aśokan tends to a two-stroke composition, but he ignores the legitimate conclusion therefrom, viz., that it belongs to a later period. The letters ch and chn seem to be joined together by a stroke.

The sixth letter is unfortunately blurred and offers considerable difficulty. The chisel marks may be more or less made out by holding the reverse of the estampage before a looking glass. The distinct portion consists of an indented vertical line ending in a loop on the left. A closer examination, however, reveals the fact that the upper portion of the indented line also has a similar loop on the left whereas a similar though a smaller loop appears at the right end of the vertical line. The letter thus seems to consist of three big dots and may be read as i, while, along with the conjunct i sign at the top, the whole thing may be taken to represent i. It may, however, be justly doubted whether the faint loops on the upper left and the lower right ends really form part of the letter. If they do not, the letter may be read as vi as it greatly resembles the vi in Allahabad inscription represented in Bühler's Tafel (IV, II-35.)

The last two letters seem to me to be really numerical symbols. The first of them consists of an upper and a lower portion. The upper portion, which is entirely above the top line of the letters in the inscription, consists of two equal vertical lines joined by a base of about equal length. The lower portion consists of the downward projection of the right vertical line and a slanting line issuing from it on the left just a little below where it is joined by the base line. The whole thing thus looks like a big pta and this is the well-known symbol for 40.

The last symbol has also two distinct parts. The lower one is a figure like ka, and the upper one consists of a vertical line joined by a slightly slanting base line with the vertical line of ka. This was the well known form for 4 during both the Kushana and Gupta periods and we may interpret the symbol in our record as such. (Of course if the last two signs are to be read as letters, Mr. Chanda is right in reading them as etke.)

The complete inscription may, therefore, be read as:—

Gate (yakhe?) Lechchhai (vi) 40, 4.

It may be translated as

"the year 44 of the Lechchhai or Lechchhavi having expired."

The Lechchhavi is the same as the well-known Lichchhavi. The form Lechchhai also occurs in the Jaina Kalpasūtra.<sup>6</sup> The Lichchhavi era is also well known and its initial date according to the calculation of M. Sylvain Lévi, falls in the year A.D. 110-11. The inscription may therefore be taken to denote that the statue on which it was incised was made in the year 44 of the Lichchhavi era which is equivalent to A.D. 154-155.

II.—Inscription on the statue without the head.

Cunningham :— Yakhe Sanatananda (bharata?).

Jayaswal :—Sapakhate Vaja Nandi.

Chanda :—Yakha Sa(?)vaja nandi.

The first letter is a characteristic Kushan y, as remarked by Mr. Chanda, and no comment would have been necessary but for the fact, that in his article Mr. Jayaswal has referred to me in a manner which might imply that I read it as s. The fact is that I read it as y the very first time it was shown to me by Mr. Jayaswal, but he contended that the two parts of what I read as y were really two separate letters, and I suggested that in that case the left portion may be taken along with a fine line I discovered above it and read as s. I have since examined the inscription with great care and am convinced that the fine line is not a chiselled one but has been produced by a crack in the stone, and that the first letter must be read as y.

The second letter may be read as khe although the e stroke is not quite distinct. The third letter has no doubt the appearance of t, but the reverse of the estampage shows that the right hand stroke ends in an upward hook. So I am inclined to take it as s along with Messrs. Cunningham and Chanda. There is a deeply impressed dot on the top of the line, such as occurs on the sixth letter. I take it to represent an anusvāra. The letter may therefore be read as sa'.

The fourth letter is undoubtedly v. The fifth letter I read as ji. Mr. Jayaswal reads it as ja but the central bar is quite clear. Mr. Jayaswal apparently takes it as part of the fold line but Professor Bhandarkar, who examined it along with me, agrees in my view that it is more deeply impressed than the rest of the line and must therefore be taken as part of the letter. It may be noted that the eye-copy of Cunningham distinctly preserves the central bar and Mr. Chanda also admits the possibility of reading it as j. The i sign is marked by a slanting line at the top which is clearly visible on the reverse.

The sixth letter is nā. The lower base is a clear curve, a characteristic of the Kushan n (cf. Bühler's Tafel II, III-25). The anusvāra sign, a deeply impressed dot, occurs on the mātrā line and a slanting stroke on the right ending in a dot is faintly visible on the reverse of the estampage.

The last letter, looked upon as an archaic d by Mr. Chanda, I take to be a numerical symbol. Its upper portion consists of a hook attached to a vertical on the right. Its lower portion is formed by another hook, with a long downward projection, joined to the lower end of the vertical line. Now the figure for 70 on Kshatrapa coins also consists of a vertical with two hooks at its two ends (Bühler's Tafel IX, col. v).† Its lower hook, is, however, attached to the right end of the vertical, whereas the symbol in our record has its hook on the left. This seems to be an eastern peculiarity, for we find that the Gupta figure for 70 has its lower hook on the left of the vertical line exactly as in the present case (ibid., col. ix). The only real difference lies in the fact that in our symbol the lower hook shows a considerable projection such as is met with neither in Kushan, Kshatrapa or Gupta period. This seems to be due to an attempt, on the part of the engraver, to enlarge the size of the symbol so as to distinguish it from the letters of the inscription. This suggestion is based on a comparison of Inscription No. 1. As already observed, both the numerical symbols in that inscription are distinguished from the letters of the inscription by the largeness of their size. Any one who looks at Bühler's table for numerical symbols may satisfy himself that only a general, and by no means a close, resemblance is noticeable between the symbols for the same figure, in the same period. To take an instance, one may compare the two Kushan symbols for 70 given by Bühler. Under these circumstances, it is permissible, I hope, to read our symbol as 70 inasmuch as it shows a general resemblance with the Kshatrapa form, which appears to be interchangeable with the Kushan form, as well as with the Gupta form.

The whole inscription may thus be read as

and may be translated as

"(The figure of a) Yaksha, (made) in the year 70 of the Vajjis."

Now the word Vaji is the wellknown Prakrit equivalent for the tribal name Vrijji, the confederate group to which the Lichchhavis belonged. The era of the Vajjis may, therefore, be taken to be identical with the Lichchhavi era, the same era being apparently designated either after the confederate tribe or its most influential section at the time. For we know that other members of the tribe are lost in oblivion while the Lichchhavis established a kingdom in Nepal and entered into matrimonial alliance with the Gupta Emperors.

Thus the year 70 of the Vajjis would be equivalent to A.D. 180-181.

If my reading and interpretations be correct, the inscriptions must be looked upon as of great historical importance. I do not wish to dilate upon this point till the substantial correctness of my views is established beyond dispute, but shall content myself by merely pointing out the various directions in which the inscriptions are expected to throw important light.

First, they will prove that the statues really represent Yakshas as Cunningham maintained long ago, in spite of the objection raised thereto by Mr. Jayaswal from the point of view of Indian art.

Secondly, as the statues bear a known date, they may be used as an important landmark in the evolution of Indian art, and, in particular, we shall have to abandon the views of Mr. Jayaswal, apparently endorsed by Mr. Arun Sen, that the statues were pre-Mauryan.

Thirdly, the inscriptions will go a long way in proving the political supremacy of the Lichchhavis over the Imperial city of ancient India, shortly before the time of the Guptas. This has been long suspected but never proved with any definiteness. The inscriptions thus not only fill a blank in the history of Pataliputra but also explain the pride of the Imperial Guptas on their connection with the Lichchhavis.

Fourthly, they supply us with early dates of the Lichchhavi era coming from a locality far away from the Nepal Valley where alone it is so far known to have been used.

I shall conclude my remarks on the Patna statues with a short reference to the note on the subject by Mr. R. D. Banerji, M.A., Superintendent, Archaeological Survey, Western Circle, in the latest number<sup>1</sup> of the J BORS, which is just to hand. Mr. Banerji remarks: "There may be difference of opinion about the different parts of Mr. Jayaswal's theory but there cannot be two opinions about the readings Aco and Vaṭa Nandi and therefore Mr. Jayaswal's identification of these two pieces of sculpture as statues as against images and as statues of two Śāśunāka Emperors, Aja Udayin and Vartan Nandin, rests on very solid grounds." (p. 210.)

Now, as has been shown above, there is room for difference of opinion as to the readings

Acho and Vaṭṭanaṇḍi, but even assuming that the readings are correct, these letters, by themselves, certainly do not lead to the identifications proposed by Mr. Jayaswal; for Acho and Vaṭṭanaṇḍi may be merely part of bigger words, as, for example, in the reading proposed by Mr. Chanda. But let us concede that they are independent words, and even further, that they are proper names. Does it necessarily follow that they are to be taken to refer to the Śaisunāga Emperors whose names bear real or fancied resemblance to them? The unreliable nature of this argument may be better demonstrated by an example. In Epigraphia Indica, Vol. I, p. 385, we have got the text of an inscription incised on the base of a large statue. Now the word Pushyamitra occurs in this record. Arguing on Mr. Banerji's lines the identification of the statue as that of the founder of the Śuṅga dynasty may be said 'to rest on very solid grounds.' The context, however, proves beyond doubt that the word Pushyamitra is the name of a 'Kula' or family. Again, another record on a statue, published in Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 388, contains the word aya, which is really part of the word ayasaṅgamikaya. Is Mr. Banerji prepared to maintain that the identification of the statue with that of king Azes 'rests on very solid grounds'? The absurdity of these conclusions is too patent, but the position assumed by Mr. Banerji in the case of Śaisunāga statues is of precisely the same type. He reads the inscription on one of these statues as bha (P) ge acho chhoniviko. He cannot explain the rest of the sentence, but simply because there are two letters in it which may be construed as the name of a Śaisunāga emperor, he concludes that it is a statue of this illustrious personage.

Next comes the much more important question, do the names Acha and Vaṭṭanaṇḍi, assuming they are such, really denote any Śaisunāga emperors? Mr. Banerji has assumed that they do, evidently on the authority of Mr. Jayaswal, and as he has not furnished any arguments in support of this assumption, we can only take into consideration those that were put forward by the latter (p. 97). Now there is no monarch called 'Aja' in the Puranic list of Śaisunāga kings as one may satisfy himself by looking at Pargiter's Purāṇa Text, pp. 20-22, but Mr. Jayaswal maintains that the Bhāgavata Purāṇa gives 'Aja' in place of Udayin, and that it refers to Nandivardhana as son of Aja (Ājeya). As a matter of fact, however, the Purāṇa does no such thing. In the first place the Bhāgavata Purāṇa has Ajayaḥ smṛitaḥ which means 'remembered as Ajaya (invincible)' and not Aja (unborn); and Mr. Jayaswal's attempt to split up ajayaḥ into aja and yah is inadmissible on two grounds. First, it violates grammatical rules, the correct form being ajo yah. Secondly, the corrupt variant readings in the Vishṇu Purāṇa such as anaya, danaya, etc., seem to show that the word really consisted of three syllables, as Mr. Jayaswal himself argued elsewhere, in order to find out the true form of the name Ojiraka.<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Jayaswal's second assertion that Nandivardhana is called son of Aja in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa is equally unhappy. The word used is Ājeya, which according to ordinary rules of grammar cannot yield the meaning 'son of Aja', but 'son of Ajeya', which, like Ajaya, means invincible. Mr. Jayaswal's reference to Pāṇini is indeed unfortunate. "The Subhra group," says he, "contains many proper names out of which Aja seems to be one." The one name in the group which makes any near approach to it is, however, ajavasti. Is Mr. Banerji prepared to maintain, along with Mr. Jayaswal, that this should be split up into aja and vasti? Mr. Jayaswal has further sought to strengthen his position by a reference to the Pradyota list, but all his arguments are of no value so long as he cannot independently establish a king Aja in the Śaisunāga list, and in this, as we have seen, he has completely failed.

Again, Vaṣṇanāṇḍi, as the name of a Saiśunāga emperor, is not to be found in any of the Purāṇas. But Mr. Jayaswal identifies him with Nāṇḍivardhana in a most ingenious manner. He notices that Vāyu Purāṇa calls him Vartī Vardhana, and assuming "that Vartī ought to be Varta", he takes the latter to be another name of Nāṇḍivardhana. He apparently overlooks the fact that the Vāyu Purāṇa has got three variants, not one, viz. Vartī Vardhana, Vardhi<sup>o</sup> and Kirtī<sup>o</sup>, and that all of them end in 'i'. But let us grant that Varta was another name of the emperor Nāṇḍi who had the imperial title Vardhana. But, then, how to explain the curious form Varta-Nāṇḍi, composed as it is of the two variant proper names? We can expect either Nāṇḍi Vardhana or Varta Vardhana, but surely no one would expect Nāṇḍi Varta or Varta Nāṇḍi. There are no doubt historical instances of kings possessing double names. Thus Chandragupta II was also known as Devagupta, and Vigrahapāla had a second name Sūrapāla. But who has ever heard of compound names like Chandra-Deva or Deva-Chandra, and Sūra-Vigraha or Vigraha-Sūra?

We hope Mr. R. D. Banerji, who has endorsed the view of Mr. Jayaswal, would offer satisfactory explanation of all these difficulties. He admits that the inscriptions on the statues are of a considerably later period, and simply because there are some letters in them which by a stretch of imagination, more remarkable for ingenuity than soundness, can be equated with two names in the Saiśunāga list, he unhesitatingly endorses Mr. Jayaswal's theory that the statues are to be looked upon as those of the two Saiśunāga emperors!!

Regarding the age of the inscriptions Mr. Banerji remarks: "Even if we reject other evidence about the date of these two specimens the script of the short inscriptions on their backs would be sufficient to prove that the statues of Kanishka is decidedly later in date than the Patna ones." (p. 210.)

In other words, the script of the Patna statues is, in the opinion of Mr. Banerji, decidedly earlier in form than the early Kushan alphabet. Yet when Mr. Banerji proceeds to examine in detail the palæography of the inscriptions on Patna statues, he notes that—

- (1) "the vowel A in Aco very closely resembles in form the same vowel in the Sarnath Inscriptions" (which the editor of the record referred to the year 40 of the Kushana era on palæographic considerations).<sup>10</sup>
- (2) "the form of ca.....in the Patna inscription resembles that in a Mathura inscription of the year 52 of the Kuṣāṇa era."
- (3) "the form of cha in choni....in the Patna inscription resembles the Kuṣāṇa form."
- (4) "examined palæographically the inscription on the statue of Varta-Nandin also points to the same conclusion." (p. 213.)

It is difficult to reconcile the results of this detailed examination by Mr. Banerji with his general statement that the script of the Kushana inscriptions is decidedly later in date than that of the inscriptions on the Patna statues. On the whole, the logical outcome of Mr. Banerji's argument is that the inscriptions on the Patna statues really belong to the Kushan period, and in this view Mr. Chanda and myself are in entire agreement with him.

Mr. Banerji's argument to explain the occurrence of a late inscription on an early statue (p. 214) is weak in the extreme and need not be seriously considered. It is enough to point out that if it were the object of 'somebody connected with the Art gallery' to make the Saiśunāga statues familiar to the people who had altogether forgot them, he should certainly have chosen a most conspicuous place to insert the name which, by the way, would most probably have been associated with usual royal titles and the family name, viz. Saiśunāga.

NOTES ON CURRENCY AND COINAGE AMONG THE BURMESE.

BY SIR RICHARD TEMPLE, Bt.

IN 1887—something over thirty years ago—I commenced making notes and selections for a series of elaborate articles on the currency and coinage of the former Kingdom of Burma, as I felt myself to be in a position to rescue from oblivion an ancient system which was inevitably passing away beyond recall, and as at the same time that system had in it a great deal that explained the more advanced methods obtaining in other parts of the world, while it retained much that threw light on the methods of ancient and even primitive times. The point of special interest was that I could study going on around me in Upper Burma the ways of a civilised people that was still carrying on its domestic life and its commerce without coin of the realm as its medium of exchange. The ideas as to money and money values involved in such conditions are so entirely at variance with those that have prevailed in the western world and even in the Near and Middle East for many centuries, that it seemed to me, for the sake of a scientific knowledge of the true meaning of habits of such transcendent importance to mankind as the modes of conducting commercial relations, to be worth while to make what collection of facts and comments thereon I could before it was too late.

The heavy obligations of a busy official life, however, prevented my putting my notes and observations into print until 1897, in which year I commenced the contemplated series of articles in this Journal (Vol. XXVI, p. 154). I then examined firstly, currency without a coinage, taking peasant currency for my first detailed subject (p. 157), passing on to the use of clipped bullion (p. 160), the effect of bullion currency (p. 197) and valuation by weight (p. 204). Next I considered the evil of bullion currency (p. 211), an important and much misunderstood point, as articles in the daily papers of England alone show to this day. After this, I examined the age of bullion currency in Burma (p. 232) and made a complete enquiry into the history of the terms dinga (p. 235) and tickal (p. 253).

Retracing my steps somewhat, the next subject examined was the general one of barter and metallic currency (p. 260), considering barter generally (p. 261) and then the many special articles which have been used by man as the medium of exchange, both natural (p. 281) and manufactured (p. 285). This led me to the study of conventional non-metallic articles used for money (p. 290), which was followed by brief notes on the history of exchange in the Far East (p. 309), with some additional notes on barter (p. 311).

The research into the above questions led to an historical consideration of the vast subject of bullion weights (p. 313), commencing (p. 314) with the all-important fundamental low denomination or standard found in the seeds of the abrus (ywof) and the adenanthera (ywajji, ywajyi). This enabled me to examine the Burmese weights and compare them usefully with those of India and the surrounding nations (p. 318). I then (in Vol. XXVII) found myself deeply involved in the question of the history of the bullion weights used in many countries and at many times, commencing with Siamese and Shan weights from English and French sources (p. 1) and going on to Chinese weights (p. 29) and Malay weights (p. 37). To complete the subject, I examined the weights used in Southern India (p. 57) including those reported by many early European travellers (p. 63 and again, p. 85).

Going back to Burma, the next subjects taken up were those of the Pali and old Burmese weights (p. 113) and the standard weights of the Burmese Kings (p. 141).

I am afraid I then became rather lost as to my main subject in an enquiry into the ways of the minor peoples inhabiting what is now known as Burma and its neighbourhood, because it involved an examination of their languages (p. 141) so far as they related to money, currency and weights. In this way the following languages were searched, so far as they were known at the date of writing, 1898 :—Karen (p. 144), Talaing (p. 150), Manipuri (p. 169), Kachin-Naga Group (p. 197), Chin-Lushai Group (p. 253). The time and space spent on this enquiry was not altogether wasted, as it enabled me from personal enquiry to provide a working transliteration or rather transcription of Karen, which at that date did not exist, making it a sealed tongue to all who could not study the language on the spot, and also of all the other tongues above mentioned, in such a way that general Oriental scholars could readily understand the terms used and compare them with other languages. The enquiry as to Manipuri was specially useful, as it disclosed an illuminating system of monetary reckoning of a very ancient type and explained much that has been puzzling to students of Oriental weights and measures and monetary systems, besides being in its essentials a system that is at the bottom of habits that have obtained in countries very far removed from Manipur in history and civilisation.

The next thing that happened was that the pressure of official duties in the Indian Empire prevented my resuming the research further until my retirement in 1904, and since then I have found, as many others have found, that a return to life in England meant a pressure of fresh duties as heavy as that of official life in the East, with the consequence that until now I have been unable to publish anything further on this subject. The close of the European War, however, and the hope of a partial cessation of work connected therewith and of postal difficulties have determined me to publish what I still can of notes collected so long ago, as they contain information which, so far as I know, is not to be found elsewhere.

Some of the old notes I found to be almost ready for press, some to be far advanced and some still in the stage of being mere notes; and as it is now more than a quarter of a century since I was in Burma, I am not able to do more than publish what there happens to be already collected or to maintain the strict sequence of the former articles. I will therefore print those notes that are most advanced first, leaving the rest to follow in such order as may be found convenient.

The articles above described do not cover all that I have written on the general subject of currency, for opportunities have been taken as they have arisen to examine other phases of the same and kindred subjects. Thus in 1899 (Vol. XXVIII, p. 104) I published some Notes on the Development of Currency in the Far East, showing how all the existing Troy weights and currencies in India and the Far East are based on one, and sometimes both, of two seeds, the abrus and the adenanthera, the latter being double of the former, and that the whole currency of the Far East is based on the Indian Troy weight system. I also showed that in ancient India there were two concurrent Troy scales, which I called the literary and the popular, on one or other of which all the scales of modern India or of the neighbouring countries outside it are based. This led me to state that the modern Burmese scale is identical with the literary Indian scale, and so are the scales of all Far Eastern peoples possessed of the Indo-Chinese civilisation—the Siamese Shans and the Malays especially. I then passed on to show that neither in form nor in nomenclature is the so-called Chinese currency of the modern merchants trading in the Far East originally Chinese, but that it is an international system, entirely Malayan in origin, constituting the latest development of the ancient Indian literary scale.

On the other hand, the old Indian popular scale was caught up by the Muhammadan invaders of the 13th century A.D. and transmitted by them to the Europeans and Indians of to-day. It has found its way to the wild tribes of the Indian and Tibeto-Burman frontiers and to ancient China itself, before the days of the decimal scale in that country introduced by the Mongols in about the 13th century A.D.—a circumstance that has deeply affected the modern Chinese commercial scale, which is nowadays the Malayan scale in form and nomenclature and chiefly decimal in character.

I have here spoken practically in terms of Troy weight, because the Far Eastern peoples have never separated the ideas of Troy weight, currency and coinage.

The two Indian scales may be thus stated for clearness as 96 rati to the tôlâ for the popular scale and 320 raktikâ to the palâ for the literary scale: this last corresponding to 320 ywgyi to the bôl for Burma, 320 hūng to the tamlūng for Siam, and 320 kāndari to the bāngkal for the Malays.

In 1900 (Vol. XXIX, pp. 29 and 61) I published an elaborately illustrated article on the beginnings of Currency which took me all over the world and over all time, ancient and modern. In it I discussed the three points of Barter, Currency and Money in their earliest and simplest forms. Barter was defined as the exchange of possessions pure and simple: Currency as the interposition of an article in common domestic use between the articles bartered, the interposed article being the medium of exchange. Money as the use of purely conventional articles as the medium of exchange. That is to say, Barter is the exchange of one article for another: Currency implies exchange through a medium: Money, that the medium is a token.

I then gave many instances of pure barter between savages and semi-civilised peoples and the civilised, and showed by instances how the border between barter and currency was crossed. The process is not difficult, but the passing of currency to money involves getting over many difficulties from the use, for the medium of exchange, of roughly measured natural articles of many kinds to carefully measured and officially marked manufactured articles, leading eventually to the use of gold, silver and copper money as the survivals of the fittest of almost every conceivable article tried at some place or at some time or other. A clear understanding of this fundamental subject is necessary to a complete comprehension of discussions such as that opened up by a consideration of the present enquiry or one analogous to it—that is, of the Currency and Coinage of any given country.

In 1913 I published in Vol. XLII, pp. 1-73, a long and elaborately illustrated article on the Obsolete Tin Currency and Money of the Federated Malay States, which had occupied my attention for some time previously. There were mysterious exhibits in museums of articles in tin, thought to be old Malay toys. A very careful examination, however, of all the available specimens showed them to be beyond question specimens of some system of a forgotten currency or money. There were among them tin ingots on a scale and tin tokens, also to scale, representing the tin ingots—that is, these specimens represented a tin currency and a tin money in use among the Malays. Other specimens were models of animals, also to scale, representing a former tin currency. These discoveries led to an examination of the literature likely to illuminate the subject, and it was then discovered that there was a long continued, though now obsolete, currency and money in tin in the Malay Peninsula for at least 500 years up to quite recent times, conducted in the more modern times on two scales—one representing the old Dutch and the other the British monetary system introduced into the Peninsula by Europeans.

Incidentally the enquiry led to many interesting discoveries, e.g., the true explanation of some of Tavernier's plates of Oriental coinage (1678) and of many other specimens of coins in museums, books, and so on, and of Albuquerque's Portuguese Oriental Coinage (1511).

The scales used in this Tin Currency proved to be of a most interesting nature, opening up, through the Manipuri system already mentioned, a wide vista of analogous developments all over the world: in Russia, in old Portugal and Holland and practically every country of modern Europe from the days of Charlemagne in the 7th century; in ancient India and Kashmir, and even Egypt, Assyria and Persia. The enquiry took one in fact nearly everywhere in ancient and modern times, showing that one was here on the track of some working of the human mind that is universal.

It is this consideration that in reality makes such a study as the Currency and Coinage among the Burmese possess an interest far outside the boundaries of the country now known as Burma, because in Burma we have in this matter, as it were, a living link between the present and the past.

I have gone thus at length into what I have written on this enquiry so that the reader may be put into possession of what has preceded the present notes and make himself, if he so wishes, acquainted with so much of the subject as will render them the more intelligible and useful.

I commence my further notes with some on lump currency, beginning with silver.

1.

SILVER.

The raw lump currency of Upper Burma consisted of gold, silver, and lead,<sup>1</sup> but not of copper,<sup>2</sup> so far as I know, as that metal is not, I believe, to be found in the country.

<sup>2</sup> See Yule, Asc., p. 259; Crawford, Asc., pp. 427, 433, 436, 444. But see Crawford, op. cit., p. 42 and Col. Strover's Report on the Metals and Minerals of Upper Burma, quoted in Laurie's Our Burmese Wars, p. 372. Cf. Crawford's statement as to Siam, in his Siam, p. 331; also B. B. Gazetteer, Vol. 1, pp. 54, 416. So the Chinese found that the people of San-bo-tsai (? Sumatra) in the days of the Sung Dynasty (A.D. 960-1279) had no copper currency, but merely (? lump) gold and silver: Indo-China, 2nd Ser., Vol. 1, p. 187. Cf. Miss Corner's China written for Bohn, Bell's ed., p. 7; and Pyrard de Lavat, 111; Staunton, Embassy, 1797, as to Cochin China, p. 169 f. Silver or "compraw" is the currency of the Kachins. See Anderson, Mandalay to Momiên, pp. 151, 425. This word is kumprai in Symington's Kachin Vocabulary, and is given as synonymous to rupee; s.v. Rupee: and it is comprong in Anderson's vocabulary at p. 463, op. cit. Colquhoun, Amongst the Shans, however, in a Plate facing p. 315, shows "copper lats at Bassac and Ubone" (on the Mekong) without description: see also Bowring's Siam, Vol. 1, p. 257.

In reference to copper, Dr. Anderson, Siam, p. 179, tells a good story of a lie in defence of delinquencies. When Potts, the factor at Ayuthia, at the time that the factory was burnt in 1682, was called upon to account for the losses, he explained that 500 chests of Japan copper, which the Company had in specie in Ayuthia, had been eaten by white-ants. Alexander Hamilton, the original raconteur of the tale, however, remarks that "Copper is thought too hard a morsel for them." In his Mandalay to Momiên, p. 468, Anderson gives the same vernacular word for "copper" and "brass." Yule, Asc., p. 345, has a very interesting note on the manner in which copper was procured in Upper Burma from the process of changing coarse (i.e., heavily alloyed with copper) silver into fine. "In this way," he says, on the authority of Mr. Spears, "that about 12,000 viss (above 20 tons) of copper annually reached the capital."

The purest recognised silver in Burma is called Shān b'ò, or pure silver, and is extracted from lead ore in the Shān country. It is also known, on account of its appearance, as chaubin-bauk b'ò and k'ayūbāt-ngwé. There is silver known as Burmese b'ò, and the process of extraction would appear to be the same in both cases.

The appearance<sup>3</sup> of Shān b'ò is shown by fig. 1, Plate I, a point which will be alluded to later on, while a piece of Burmese b'ò, which has undergone the process of chipping for currency, is shown in fig. 2, Plate I. Shān silver is said to contain six per cent. of gold, and reddish yellow spots, caused by salts of gold created in the process of extraction from the ore, are frequently to be seen on the reverse surface of Shān b'ò.

Yule says, Ava, p. 260, that b'ò was the currency obtaining between the Burmese and foreigners, but that the King refused it as such, owing to the greater difficulty of testing it than of testing dain, a lower quality of silver. He also says on the great authority of Col. Burney that k'ayūbāt-ngwé was an inferior quality to b'ò,<sup>4</sup> thus differing from my information.

For the high quality of Shān b'ò, we have an interesting reference in McLeod's Journal, where he says, "The silver current is of the best description, either the Chinese stamped square coin or bau [b'ò] silver, or the Burmese ywetni [ywetni]."<sup>5</sup>

Prinsep (Useful Tables, pp. 30, 31), who saw a great deal of Burmese silver in the first quarter of the last century, agrees with Yule, and so far disagrees with me in differentiating between b'ò and k'ayūbāt-ngwé.<sup>6</sup> He says that the k'ayūbāt silver "is supposed to denote a particular fineness, which by Burmese law but [? ought] to be ten-ninths ywetni in value; i.e., 9 likals of k'ayūbāt pass for ten of ywetni silver; or it should contain 10½ b'ò and ¾ copper."

As to b'ò he makes a curious, but natural, mistake. I will give his statement verbatim. He says, "Ban signifies 'pure' or 'touch,'<sup>7</sup> and is the purest obtainable by the Burmese process of refinery. This word is synonymous with banny of the Ajeen Akbery [bāni of the Ātn Akbari]: bunwary [banwāri] is the Indian name of the touch-needles used in roughly valuing the precious metals." Now the word b'ò is usually spelt by writers as baw or bau and was mistaken by Prinsep in Burney's MSS. for ban. Hence all his wrong etymology and inferences. The mistaking of au for an in Burmese words containing the sound which I write as ò (= aw in awful) is very common in books. Some are full of such mistakes, e.g., the value of Macmahon's Karens of the Golden Chersonese is entirely marred by this printer's error, and so is that of many papers on Burma and the neighbourhood printed by the House of Commons.

The second quality of silver is called dain running about 89 to 93 per cent. of b'ò.<sup>8</sup> It is known by the marks of striation on its upper, or obverse, surface. A specimen is shown in fig. 3, Plate I. This was the silver used, according to Yule, Ava, p. 260, for the trade with China.

Prinsep, op. cit., p. 31, says that in his time dain was the most common form of bullion in circulation, and was so called from an assessment levied during the late King's reign (Bôdôp'ayā) upon villages and houses: dain signifying a stage, or distance of two miles. He says it was supposed to be 10% better than ywetni, but varied in reality from 1% to 10% better; and he points out that to admit it to be 10% better would make it equal to k'ayūbāt, which was not the case.

For the statement that the word dain was derived as Prinsep says I have often tried to find corroboration, and there are difficulties in accepting it as correct, e.g., dain (spelt dōn) means in Burmese, without the heavy accent, (1) a petty chief, foreman of works, the controller of an establishment, such as a gambling-house, opium-den, liquor-shop: (2) a class of Government servants in charge of petty offices: and (3) according to Judson, Burmese Dict., "a silver of a certain quality better than ywetni."<sup>10</sup> Whereas the word for "a stage or distance of two miles" is tain or atain, spelt tāi or atōn. Tain, without the heavy accent, means (1) a post, a column: (2) to ask leave: (3) to reach, arrive, attain: (4) to use for a warp in weaving, to set the time in singing. Atain, without the heavy accent, means (1) the measure of 1000 tās about two miles (cf. the kās of India): (2) a warp: (3) the right hand ox in a team.

The special assessment alluded to by Prinsep is that mentioned in Spearman's British Burmah Gazetteer, Vol. I, p. 447, who says that "in 1798 A.D. a call of 33 1/3 ticals of silver was made from every house. This took two years to collect and produced about Rs. 6,000,000. What the actual amount levied from the people was it is impossible to ascertain!"

Prinsep gives us another class called mādain, which Burney stated to be equal to ywetni, but it was in reality much worse. He says it has been extensively circulated and was a "late introduction," say about 1825, and consisted of silver mixed with lead.

Malcolm, Travels, Vol. II, p. 269, says that "Dyng has the flowered appearance over all the cake in larger and longer crystals [than ywetni], and is cast into cakes weighing about twenty ticals, but varies exceedingly in fineness, being of qualities from Huet-nee [ywetni] to ten per cent. purer. It is assumed to be five per cent. purer."

Ngwélōn and maingyōn-ngwō, the latter a Shān (Māngyang or Māngyōng) silver, both known by their appearance, are said to be equal to dain in fineness. A specimen of ngwélōn is figured in fig. 4, Plate I, and of maingyōn in fig. 5, Plate I. The latter is much worn.

The third quality of silver is called ywetni, about 85 per cent. of b'ō,<sup>11</sup> and is especially interesting as having been the old native Burmese standard of silver; at any rate when the Burmese Court was at Ava, Amarapura and Mandalay, so much was it the standard in King Mindōn's time that Yule tells us (Ava, p. 260) that dain was frequently valued in terms of ywetni. A specimen of ywetni is shown in fig. 6, Plate I. Like Shān b'ō this silver is frequently thickly covered on its reverse surface with spots of (litharge) salts of gold.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>10</sup> My idea is that dain, in its application to silver, merely means "chief" or "best" or "principal." See Stevenson, Burmese Dict., s.v.

<sup>11</sup> Yule, Ava, pp. 260, 345, says it varied from 85 per cent. to 90 per cent. of b'ō, the alloy being copper. At p. 344 he values gold in terms of "ywetni" (ywetni) silver; but on p. 345 he calls it "yu-wetni."

<sup>12</sup> It is probably the ngwēngwet (spotted silver) of the consignment from Sir Frank Gates in 1839, which never reached me.

PATNA MUSEUM INSCRIPTION OF JAYASĒNA.

BY N. G. MAJUMDAR, B.A.; CALCUTTA.

The subjoined inscription was discovered in a village called Janibigha situated at about 6 miles to the east of the modern site of Bôdh-gayâ, whence it has now been removed to the Patna Museum. It has already been published by Mr. H. Panday, of the Archæological Department, with a preliminary note on its importance by Mr. K. P. Jayaswal, in the Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society, Vol. IV, p. 266 ff. and Plate. As Mr. Panday's transcript and translation are, I am afraid, anything but accurate and as Mr. Jayaswal's historical conclusion unfortunately, is open to serious doubt I am compelled to publish this paper and I sincerely hope, that my remarks and emendations will receive the due attention of Mr. Panday who I hear, is engaged upon editing this inscription in the Epigraphia Indica.

The inscription is carefully engraved on a piece of stone. It contains 14 lines of writing which cover a space of about  $9\frac{1}{2}'' \times 7\frac{1}{4}''$ . On the whole it is in a good state of preservation; but a portion of the stone has broken away from the left margin, thus the beginning letter of l. 9 has totally disappeared, and the beginning letter of l. 10 has been partially damaged. The size of the letters varies from  $\frac{1}{8}''$  to  $\frac{1}{4}''$ .—The alphabet belongs to the Proto-Bengali type of the 11th and 12th centuries A.D., and is the same as in the Bôdh-gayâ inscription of Asokachalla, of the year 74 of the Lakshmagasēna era.<sup>1</sup> With regard to the forms of individual letters, attention may be drawn to the following: the medial u is shown in a variety of ways,<sup>2</sup> e.g. by an angle at the base of a letter, as in purāṇam (l. 1), by a slanting right hand stroke at the base, as in Buddhasēna° (l. 8) and also by a curve turning to the left from the end of the stem, almost like a subscript t in shape, as in śudī (l. 14); the subscripts ṭ and ṭ are almost similar in °stalam (l. 3) and dushṭa (l. 11); the subscript ṭh in the conjunct letters ṭh and sth in Koṭṭhalā (ll. 4-5) and sthala (l. 4), as well as the conjunct tm in °tmajēna (l. 8) deserves specially to be noted; the superscript r is put on the top of a letter, as in ā-chandrārkkam (l. 5); l occurs in two forms, as in Maṅgala (l. 6) and Lakshmana (l. 13); the anusvāra is of the form of a circle, either detached from the vertical, as in purāṇam (l. 1), or touching the same, as in jīnānām (l. 2); the visarga resembles the English figure 8 and sometimes carries a tail, as in sahitaḥ (l. 4) and kṛitinaḥ (l. 7), an abnormality noticed by Bühler regarding the sign as it occurs in North-east Indian inscriptions and MSS. of this period;<sup>3</sup> the sign of anagraha is employed only in sishṭo 2'thavā in l. 11; and the sign for Om (l. 1) is exactly similar to that in the inscription of Asokachalla mentioned above.—The language is Sanskrit, and with the exception of the introductory phrase Om svasti in l. 1 and the concluding words which express the date in ll. 13-14 the whole text is in verse. As regards orthography, it may be noticed that gh has been substituted for h in Siṅghalasya in l. 6; the same sign has been used both for v and b; a consonant is doubled after a superscript r, only in ā-chandrārkkam in l. 5; and that an anusvāra is wrongly employed in paramparāṇam in ll. 1-2.

<sup>4</sup> For another instance of this substitution see inscription of Asokachalla, of the year 51 of the Lakshmagasēna era.—Epi. Ind., XII, 29, ll. 9-10.

It belongs to a king named Jayasēna who is styled Āchārya and Piṭhipati, i.e. 'Lord of Piṭhi', and 't carries back the genealogy to only one step further, viz. to Buddhasēna, father of the reigning king. After the initial words Ōṃ svasti, the inscription opens with a verse in honour of the city of Mahābōdhi and the Bōdhi-tree. It then notifies the free gift of the village of Kotthala, which is in Saptaghatta, together with its land and water, and plough-tax to the Vajrasana for the residence of the Bhikṣu Maṅgala-svāmin, come from Ceylon, in whose hands was placed the charter registering the grant. Then follows the date, the year 83 of the Lakṣhmanasēna era, the 15th day of the bright-half of the month of Kārttika. This date does not admit of verification. It would correspond, according to the calculation of Diwan Bahadur L. D. Swamikannu Pillai, to (Friday) 1st November, A.D. 1202, 'on which day Kārttika śukla 15 ended at -60, i.e. 36 ghaṭikās after mean sunrise.'

Of the localities referred to in the inscription only Piṭhi has been found mentioned already in two other places, though it cannot be, at present, definitely identified. The word occurs in the commentary to the Rāmācharita of Sandhyākara Nandi (Memoirs ASB., Vol. III, pp. 36, 38) and the Sārnāth inscription of Kumaradēvi (Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, p. 323, l. 5). Dr. Sten Konow, in his paper on the inscription, put forth the conjecture that this Piṭhi is but another name for Piṭṭapuram in the Madras Presidency. It was Mr. R. D. Banerji, who first definitely said that it must lie near the boundary of Magadha (Memoirs ASB., Vol. V, p. 87). Mr. Jaysawal now points out that the commentator of the Rāmācharita explains the word Piṭhipati by Magadhādhipa (JBORS., Vol. IV, p. 267). The conclusion which now suggests itself to us, is that Piṭhi and Magadha are practically identical. At any rate, this much is certain on the strength of the present record, that it included Bōdh-gayā and the region around it, as the inscription has been discovered in that locality. This conclusion is forced upon us also by another inscription, the main contents of which will be discussed presently. The other localities mentioned in the inscription, I am unable to identify.

The importance of the record lies in the fact that it enlightens us about two hitherto unknown kings ruling over Bōdh-gayā, viz. Buddhasēna and his son and successor Jayasēna. The former, it is to be marked, is not designated king in the inscription; and from this Mr. Jaysawal infers that he never was a king properly so called, he was only some 'collateral' of the contemporary Sina king (op. cit., p. 267). But from an independent piece of evidence which will now be considered here for the first time, it appears that he did reign. It is contained in an epigraph discovered at Bōdh-gayā many years ago. It is now missing, but fortunately enough a photo-lithograph of the inscription was published by Cunningham in his Mahābōdhi,<sup>3</sup> which, therefore, is our mainstay at present. Cunningham concluded, that it was a record of the reign of Asokachalla, perhaps because his name is found mentioned in I. 8. But he did not publish a reading of the text, nor has any other scholar done so, till quite recently an attempt was made to decipher the inscription by Pandit B. B. Vidyavinode of the Indian Museum, Calcutta.<sup>4</sup> But comparing his reading with the plate itself I find that in many places the text should be read differently. The most important information contained in it and which has not yet been noticed, is, that the record belongs, not to Asokachalla as Cunningham took it to be, but to a quite different individual—Buddhasēna by name, who bears the titles Piṭhipati and Āchārya just like

Jayasēna of the Patna Museum inscription. This Buddhasēna, who is beyond doubt Jayasēna's father Buddhasēna, of our record, is represented in his inscription as registering a donation (ṇṇittī) to one Bhikkhupaṇḍita Śrī-Dharmmarakshita, the religious preceptor of the king of Kamā (Kumaon), who seems to be no other than Aśokachalla himself; and it further appears that Buddhasēna makes a similar grant to a number of Ceylonese sthaviras (ll. 13-14). At the end of the inscription there is mention of two officers, apparently of Buddhasēna, whose titles are respectively Sādhnika-Rāṇaka and Māṇḍalika (ll. 19-20). It is in the form of a declaration issued to the inhabitants of Mahābōdhi including their elders and also the tillers of the land. These characteristics are enough to prove that Buddhasēna did actually reign. Moreover, the declaration, as it is issued to the inhabitants of Bōdh-gayā, shows that his dominions must have included at any rate the modern district of Gayā and its adjoining territory, or in other words, this was a part of Pīṭhi of which he was the sovereign. Now, I must admit that it is very difficult to restore the actual and entire text of the inscription from the plate published by Cunningham. And though I have prepared a reading of it myself, I do not venture to place the whole transcript before scholars, as I consider it merely tentative in many places. Still I reproduce here the following extract, as it constitutes by far the most valuable portion of the record and especially as there cannot be, I hope, any great difference of opinion about the general correctness of its reading:—

From the above passage we learn that a king named Buddhasēna was ruling over Bōdh-gayā at the time when Śrī-Dharmmarakshita, the religious preceptor of the king of Kamā (Kumaon), came to visit the place. Another inscription too, dated in the year 1813 of the Nirvāṇa era, mentioning the name of Aśokachalla, <sup>14</sup> and likewise discovered at Bōdh-gayā, tells us that at the time when Dharmmarakshita visited the place and was there engaged in superintending the construction of a certain gandhakupī by a prince named Purushōttama, Bōdh-gayā was under the rule of a king who belonged to the Chhinda family.<sup>15</sup> The presumption is therefore natural that he is the same as Buddhasēna, father of Jayasēna of our inscription. It is interesting to note that before the family of Buddhasēna came to power in Piṭhi, there ruled in this part of the country another family of Piṭhi lords called the Chhikkōras. They were connected, through matrimony, as we know from the Sārnāth inscription of Kumaradēvi, with the Gāhaḍavāla kings of Benares, and Bōdh-gayā must have been under them, at least in the time of Gōvindachandra, whose dates range from A.D. 1114 to 1168.<sup>16</sup> These Chhikkōras seem to have been dispossessed of their territory towards the end of the 12th century A.D. by a new family of Piṭhi rulers, viz. the family of Buddhasēna. It is very likely, that it was he who first established the greatness of the Chhinda line; because, in his inscription, there is no mention of his predecessors and in the inscription of his son Jayasēna too, the genealogy is carried back to his father only. It has, however, been assumed that these individuals, viz. Buddhasēna and Jayasēna, represent, though indirectly, the family of the Sēnas who for about a century and a half ruled the political destinies of Bengal. Thus Mr. Jayaswal writes:<sup>17</sup> "This inscription now proves that the neighbouring district of Gayā remained under a seign of the Sēna family in the time of Muhammad ibn Bakhtyar." But let us see if this inference is logical. Considering the fact that these kings have their names ending in Sēna and that Tāranātha in his list of the later Sēna kings mentions one Buddhasēna, it no doubt seems tempting to suppose that they belonged to the Sēna dynasty; but, according to Tāranātha himself, this Buddhasēna was succeeded by his son, whose name is not Jayasēna but Haritasēna.<sup>18</sup> Thus no other evidence can be put forward to connect this family of rulers with the Sēna dynasty save and except the name-ending Sēna on which, however, we cannot lay much stress. Moreover, there is absolutely no proof that the Sēna rule really survived in the heart of Magadha immediately after the Muhammadan invasion. On the other hand, in the Tabkati-Nasiri (p. 558) there is a definite assertion to the effect that the Sēnas continued to rule for a considerable period after the passing away of Lakshmanasēna, in the country of 'Bang,' i.e. Eastern Bengal, and not on the Bihar side. Again, at the time of the Muhammadan invasion, as it follows very clearly from the same authority, there was absolutely no trace of the Sēna power in Bihar. As a matter of fact, Bakhtyar passed through it and came upon Bengal where only he could find the Sēnas ruling. At any rate, even if a portion of Magadha were under the successors of Lakshmanasēna during this period, their central power rested not in Bihar but in Bengal. Again, only the use of the Lakshmanasēna era at Bōdhgayā or Tirhut is not in itself any definite proof of the continuance of the Sēna rule in Bihar. Under these circumstances, therefore, it cannot be maintained that at a later period, the Sēnas became masters of Magadha and called themselves Piṭhipatis—a title which they did not adopt even during their palmy days when they actually carried their victorious arms through Magadha. Then again, we never find the title āchārya attached to the name of any Sēna king in the whole range of Sēna inscriptions. Another important point, however, on which I should lay special stress, is that the Muhammadan invasion took place in or about A.D. 1199 and after that according to Tāranātha came the later Sēnas who were subordinate to the Turushkas or Muhammadans.<sup>19</sup> The first of this series of subordinate Sēnas is Jayasēna II who was succeeded by Buddhasēna. The latter, if Tāranātha is to be believed, should, therefore, naturally be placed much later than A.D. 1202 and as such could not probably be the father of Jayasēna.

To show that it is not so one has got to compare these two letters with prada in pradatta (l. 5) and pura in purāṇaṁ (l. 1) occurring just after the word in question. Further, the reading pradaṁ would offend against the metre and render the construction grammatically impossible. If mahābōdhi-pradaṁ is taken to be an adjective of bōdhi-taraṁ = talaṁ, which Mr. Pandey apparently prefers, then the particle cha has nothing to be connected with. My reading puram removes all these difficulties. For śrīman-Mahābōdhi as a place name see e.g. Epi. Ind., XII, 29; and above, XVII, 310. Bōdh-gayā used at this time to be called Mahābōdhi. Cf. Purushōttama's Bhāṣāṇṛitī (III, 3, 137), a work of the 12th century A.D. which cites Mahābōdhiṁ gantāmaḥ as an illustration, and Cunningham's Mahābōdhi, p. 3.

<sup>33</sup> Below the writing there is an indecent, traditional representation of this curse which is, however, not the first instance that has come to notice in Bihar, as Sir Edward Gait says—JBORS., v, 5. For this see also an inscription of Aśokachalla, now in the Indian Museum, Calcutta.—Epi. Ind., XII, 28, pl. Cf. also Jo(yo)nyathā karōti tasya gardabhaḥ pitā sākārikā mātā in a Nāgavāsini inscription—ibid., IX, 164; X, 34 and 42. The earliest representation of the above figure, so far as it has come to my notice, is to be found on a Bharhut relief, in the Indian Museum. After the word mātā and before the word Lakshmaṇasōnasya there is a blank space. To show the importance of a particular proper name in Indian epigraphs a space was occasionally left blank before it. Is the space left here to make the name Lakshmaṇasōna appear more prominent than it would otherwise have been?

<sup>35</sup> Mr. Pandey wrongly reads it as rājya-saṁ. But the ś-stroke is very clear. In the two inscriptions of Aśokachalla also we get atīta-rājyē. Apparently through an over-sight this phrase in the above records was mis-read by Mr. Banerji as atīta-rājya—JASS., N. S., IX, 271-2; but cf. Epi. Ind., XII, 29, 30. Curiously enough this erroneous reading has been supported by Pandit Gaurishankar Ojha in his new edition of the Prāchīna-līkhamāṇā, 185, n.

<sup>41</sup> The word adhivasati has been taken to mean a 'monastery' by Mr. Panday, though along with that Mr. Jayaswal suggests that it could also mean the residence of the monk. This latter alternative explanation appeals to me as the more natural one. Vasati no doubt means technically a Jaina temple, (Pischel, Grammatik, § 207) and it is also well-known that its Prakṛit equivalent is vasahī or vasahikā and Kannada tadbhava basadi or basatī (Hultsch, Epi. Ind., VIII, 200, n. 1 and Kielhorn, Epi. Ind., IX, 148, nos. 4-5); but nowhere do we meet with a word derived from adhi and vas to denote the sense of temple, either in Jaina or Buddhist literature. The word should therefore be better taken in the sense of 'settlement' or 'residence.'

<sup>42</sup> For the use of the honorific śrī before the taddhita form of a place-name cf. Śrī-Sāmatāṭikā, meaning 'come from Sāmatāṭa', in a Bōdh-gayā inscription—See ASR., 1908.9, 158.

<sup>43</sup> Regarding the word satyaśrī Mr. Panday says that this is an 'epithet' of king Jayasēna and may be compared with the same epithet in the Deopārā inscription of Vijayasēna. But unfortunately it has escaped his attention that the word satyaśrī to be found in l. 10 of the epigraph, in the passage satyaśrī kaṣ'habhittau which refers to Hemantasēna, is not an epithet at all for the simple reason that it does not qualify anything. Kielhorn accordingly translated the clause, 'in his throat true speech,' etc.—Epi. Ind., I, 312. Satyaśrī in our inscription is a Bahuvrīhi compound, whereas in the other one it is a Karmadhāraya compound, and as such it would be wrong to take the latter as an attributive.

NOTES ON CURRENCY AND COINAGE AMONG THE BURMESE.

BY SIR RICHARD TEMPLE, Bt.

PRINSEP, Useful Tables, p. 31, tells us a good deal about ywetni, ywetnee as he writes it; and among other things that it was the standard in his time. He calls ywetni "(red-leaved) flower, or star silver;" and says it was "so named from the starry appearance of the melted litharge on its surface." He further remarks that it was sometimes written by Europeans, rowanee, rouni, and roughanee. As to its quality he says the legal (standard) touch was 85% of b'd but that the average 60,000 tolas of ywetni "in the late Ava remittance" turned out 2 dwts. worse owing to a loss of more than 1% in melting from the exterior scoriae.

Ywetni must also be the silver referred to by Crawford (Ava, p. 410) as used for the payment of fines to the so-called Courts in his day (1827), for he says they were paid in tickals of silver of 10 per cent. alloy. This tickal was taken by English merchants in the early part of this century at half-a-crown.<sup>13</sup>

In his examination by Mr. Crawford in 1826, Mr. Gouger (afterwards author of The Prisoner in Burma) speaks constantly of tickals of "flowered silver"<sup>14</sup> in valuing produce. Mr. Judson, the well-known missionary, used precisely the same expression in the same circumstances.<sup>15</sup> That "flowered silver" meant ywetni or standard silver, we gather from Symes, writing a generation earlier, and also from Cox, who wrote a year later than Symes. The observant author of Two Years in Ava, p. 280, also must have meant ywetni, when he says, "The flowered silver is the least adulterated with alloy."

Symes, in his account of the Burmese currency as he found it in 1795, goes considerably wide of what must have been the true facts. He was aware that "the quantity of alloy varies in the silver current in different parts of the Empire. At Rangoon it is adulterated 25 per cent. At Amarapura, pure, or what is called flowered silver, is most common. In this latter all royal dues are paid." Here he evidently refers to ywetni or standard silver, as his table given below shows; but this "standard" silver of the Court was never "pure" silver, or anywhere near it. He writes:—

"The several modifications are as follows:—

Rouni , or pure silver,
Rounika ,	5	per cent.	of alloy,
Rounizee ,	10	do.	do.
Rouassee ,	20	do.	do.
Moowadzoo ,	25	do.	do.
Woombo , <sup>18</sup>	30	do.	do."

Rouni<sup>17</sup> is merely a rough attempt to transcribe ywetni into English characters (y=r in this as in many Burmese words, and the t is hardly heard): rounika is perhaps for ywetnig, a lump of ywetni: rounizee = ywetniz, a piece of ywetni: rouassee, perhaps = ywetsei, a piece of leaf, or flowered silver:<sup>18</sup> moowadzoo, I can only conjecture to be mojo, a gold standard, to be described later on: woombo, there is little doubt, must stand for wun-b'ò, i.e., official "pure" silver. I think we may, therefore, take it that whatever Symes was told as to alloys referred to ywetni as the standard, and that he was either misinformed about or misunderstood the vernacular terms for the various classes of alloyed silver.<sup>19</sup>

The question, however, as to what was meant by "flowered silver" may be looked upon as set at rest by the observations of Malcolm in his Travels, Vol. II, p. 269. He there tells us:—"The price of a thing is always stated in weight, just as if we should say in answer to a question of price, 'an ounce' or 'a drachm.' When an appearance like crystallisation is upon the centre of a cake, it is known to be of a certain degree of alloy and is called 'flowered silver.' Of this kind which is called Huetnee [ywetni] the tickal is worth fifteen per cent. more than the Sicca rupee. The Dyng [dain] has the flowered appearance all over the cake in larger and longer crystals." Flowered silver, then, meant firstly 'ywetni,' and secondly 'dain.'

That Symes, irrespectively of the above remarks, meant ywetni silver when he speaks of standard or recognised payments is proved by his remarks, Ava, p. 317. Talking of the military tax, he says:—"Commonly every two, three or four houses are to furnish among them the recruit, or to pay 300 tickal in money, about £40 to £45." Taking the English pound to be in his day Rs. 10, then 300 tickals are equal to Rs. 400 to Rs. 450, or 1 tickal = Rs. 1-5-0 to Rs. 1-8-0. In other words, he reckoned the tax in ywetni silver. Cox, however, intending, I think, to speak in terms of ywetni silver, works out the tickal (Burmhan Empire, p. 44) at Rs. 1-4-0, when valuing the outturn of the Yenangyaung oil wells.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>19</sup> As late as 1889 I was given equivalents in lead for silver in terms of ywetni. It should be remembered that Col. Symes was a real pioneer, and though his book shows him to have been an acute observer and quite the right kind of man to send on the delicate embassy he had to conduct, he was evidently not an Oriental scholar. Hence his statements must be taken with the caution that these two facts demand of the enquirer. His mistake as to ywetni being "pure silver" is natural enough, for in 1893 an official born and bred in Rangoon and an intelligent man, told me that ywetni and b'ò were one and the same thing!

<sup>20</sup> In an account of these wells, communicated in 1861 to Asiatic Researches, Vol. VI, p. 132, Cox says distinctly:—"The cost of sinking a new well is 2,000 teals flowered silver of the country, 2,500 sicca rupees."

Spearman, British Burma Gazetteer, Vol. I, p. 450, writing in 1870, says:—The amount remitted from the various districts of Pagan before the second Anglo-Burmese War [to the King] has been ascertained with some approach to accuracy. The revenue was paid in rock-nee [ywetni] silver and taking a viss (lbs. 3.65) or 100 tickals of this as equal to Rs. 130,<sup>21</sup> the annual remittances were, etc."

Horace Browne, in his account of the District of Thayetmyo, 1874, pp. 95f., 101ff., 107 and 111, makes, for the present subject, most valuable notes on Burmese currency and revenue at all dates from 1783 to 1852, and he says distinctly that the revenue was collected in ywetni silver which he calls "5 per cent. alloy," no doubt under a misapprehension. At any rate, he gives, in every instance, a statement of the rupee value of the old revenue, which is stated in viss of silver, and his calculations show that the tickal of revenue was worth about Rs. 1-7-0. This proves that it was paid in ywetni even if General Browne had not said so in so many words. On one occasion there was, however, a remarkable divergence from this standard. On p. 96 it is stated that the Myède township was greatly harassed by the officials of Kings Thārwādī and Pagān (1838 to 1852), and that "sums were wrung from the people with the maximum of oppression and extortion." There are seven separate calculations in rupees of the value of the silver extorted in viss at this period. In each case the calculations work out at a trifle over half a rupee per tickal, showing that the demand must have been paid in a very debased silver, worth about 30 per cent. only of ywetni.

In La Loubère's time, 1688, the practice in Siam was clearly to refer to a standard silver, the stamped tickal. Thus he says in the quaint English Translation<sup>22</sup>:—"Some informed me, as a thing very remarkable, that the Siamese sold course Silver by weight, because they had seen in the Market that Commodity in one of the Scales, and silver Money [stamped tickals] which serv'd as a Weight in the other. The same Names do therefore signifie the Weights and Money both . . . Gold is a Merchandize amongst them, and is twelve times the value of Silver, the purity being supposed equal in both the Metals."<sup>23</sup>

Ywetni silver was current as a standard in Kiang Tung in 1836, as is shown by McLeod's valuing wholesale prices there in ywetni.<sup>24</sup>

The Kings of Burma seem to have kept their treasure in pigs of silver presumably of standard quality. Here is Mr. Gouger's interesting account of the Treasury in 1823.<sup>25</sup> The King "took his walk to the Shwai-dyke [Shwēdaik=Treasury], in front of which, exposed in the open air, were arranged some hundreds of logs of pure silver, shaped like pieces of ships' kentledge, but unfortunately for me, wanting the handle with which kentledge is furnished for the convenience of lifting. The King made some remark about them. 'Your Majesty,' said I, 'must have honest subjects: in my country they would be stolen.' 'They are too heavy,' he rejoined, 'They cannot be lifted; each piece weighs 100 viss.' 'My countrymen are very strong—they would walk away with them on their shoulders. I could almost do it myself, Your Majesty.' 'Try,' said the King, 'if you can lift one, I will give it you.' The calculation ran through my head in an instant—365 lbs. av. of pure silver!

It is worth trying for at all events. I was young and not deficient in strength. Up went one foot of the log in an instant, and I believe the Golden Foot was for the moment terrified lest I should run away with it. Had there been a handle I should certainly have accomplished the feat of lifting it: but the sharp edge of the block cut my hands like a knife and I was obliged to give it up, amid the bantering laughter of the King and his Courtiers."

It may not be out of place to note here the light that the existence of this standard silver in the XIXth Century after Christ—standard by custom and rightly described by Yule as "understood to be the medium of payment when no stipulation as to kind of money is made"—throws upon a transaction recorded as having taken place in the very dawn of Biblical history.<sup>27</sup> When Sarah died, as a stranger in the land of Heth, at Kirjath-arba, "the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan," Abraham wished to treat with Ephron, the son of Zohar, for the sale to him of the cave of Machpelah, "which is in the end of his field." "For as much money as it is worth ye shall give it me." And Ephron answered, "The land is worth four hundred shekels of silver." So "Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver . . . four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant."<sup>28</sup>

Abraham, then, did precisely what a purchaser in Mandalay would have done a few years ago: he paid for his land by weight of silver of the ordinary recognised standard.<sup>29</sup>

Thāk'wā, of about the same fineness as ywetnī, is used in Bamò chiefly, and is said to be extracted by the Chinese across the border. It is really known by its spongy appearance on its reverse surface, and by the rings caused by the settling down of the molten metal on the obverse surface. Two specimens are shown in figs. 7 and 8, Plate I. The latter has been chipped for use.

It is possible that this is not of Chinese, but of Shān make, as, in a plate facing p. 315 of his Among the Shans, Colquhoun gives a picture of "cast silver in use in the Independent Shān States, which from its appearance is Thāk'wā silver."<sup>30</sup> Colquhoun, however, gives no explanation of this, and, I may add here, of many another Plate in the book.

Descending from and concurrent with the specially named qualities of silver, there is a large quantity of recognised alloyed standards with local names signifying the amount of alloy contained in the lump. The Taungwin Mingyi, second minister to King Thibò, gave me a list of twenty-two from memory, but the ordinary trader only recognises about eight.<sup>31</sup>

<sup>27</sup> The passage is, however, supposed to be a late interpolation; see Ridgeway, Origin of Currency, p. 246.

<sup>28</sup> Compare with this transaction that already quoted, ante, Vol. XXVI, p. 209, as taking place in A.D. 1794. So also did Mrs. Judson always "weigh out" money at Ava in 1823. See Wayland's Memoir of the Rev. A. Judson, pp. 252, 275, 296. So did the merchants in Cambodia in 1831, and in Siam in 1833 (Moor's Indian Archipelago, pp. 56, 202, 205). So also did the people of Borneo in A.D. 977 (Indo-China, 2nd Series, Vol. I, p. 229).

<sup>29</sup> The whole sale recorded in the 23rd Chapter of Genesis, whence these quotations are taken, is replete with customs still obtaining in North India. Other Biblical references to similar pecuniary transactions in precurrency days are:—Gen. xvii. 13; xx. 16; xxxiii. 19; xliii. 21; Exod. xxx. 15; Job, xlii. 11; Judges, ix. 4; xvi. 5; xvii. 24; 1 Sam. ix. 8; xxiv. 24; 1 Chron. xxi. 25; Is. xxxiii. 18; Ezra, vii. 25.

<sup>30</sup> Names for qualities of silver do not appear to be constant throughout the country, e.g., in this instance. I have known Shān chālōn silver called thāgwā.

<sup>31</sup> See Phayre, Int. Num. Or., Vol. III, Pt. I, p. 38, who, however, has a very imperfect note on the point. Yule, Ava, p. 345, says that the silver standards varied from pure to 60 per cent. alloy.

The Lists as respectively given me are as follows:—

Traders' List.

The eight kinds of silver used ordinarily in the bazaars are, in terms of b'ò silver, as follows:—

Tamàtkè = 97 $\frac{1}{2}$ %.	Ngâmûgè = 95 %.	Thòngmàtkè = 92 $\frac{1}{2}$ %.
Tasègè = 90 %.	Ngâmàtkè = 87 $\frac{1}{2}$ %.	Sèngàjàtkè = 85 %.
Nasègè = 80 %.	Tajàtko'ni'mûgè = 83 %.

The shi'sègè, or 80 % alloy, quality is, however, not uncommonly met with.

"Rupee silver" is chaukmûgè, i.e., 6 mús alloy in 100 mús, or 94 per cent. of b'ò silver. Of this fact we have two very interesting proofs. In Judson's English and Burmese Dictionary, 1849, we have "rupee—chaukmû: diŋgâ," i.e., "six-mú coin" and in Lane's English and Burmese Dictionary,<sup>23</sup> 1841, we have precisely the same information: while in Judson we have also "tickal-akyàt," showing that the rupee was then differentiated from the tickal and reckoned chaukmûgè silver.

Yule says, Assa, p. 261, in noticing the low classes of silver above mentioned, that all below 50 per cent. silver were liable to confiscation by the King, and that they were practically confined to the provinces. He says further that before the War of 1824, the currency at Rangoon, which was then a mere provincial seaport, had only 25 per cent. of silver in it, and after the War but 10 per cent.<sup>24</sup>

<sup>23</sup> I cannot help thinking, on a careful comparison of the two books, that Judson is more indebted to Lane than the absence of acknowledgment would lead one to infer.

In 1786 Flouest says<sup>35</sup> that in Rangoon the best silver was of ten per cent. alloy, and that silver of 25, 30, 40, and 50 per cent. was current. He gives a letter in full from "Bassim" [Bassein], dated "le 15 8bre, 1784" in which the writer says he "had settled an account, which at the present moment has reached 735 ticals, or 'roupis', of 25 per cent."

Anderson in Mandalay to Momien, p. 44, has an unconscious and exceedingly interesting note on the manufacture of lèzègè: silver (40% alloy). He says that at Bamò in 1868, a few persons were employed in melting silver for currency. "To six tickals of pure silver purchased from the Kakhyens [Kachins], one tickal eight annas of copper wire are added, and melted with alloy of as much lead as brings the whole to ten tickals weight."

Strettell, Ficus Elastica, p. 76, has an interesting but confused reference to silver standards on information taken from Capt. A. B. Bower's Bhamo Expedition Report, 1868, though he says it corresponds exactly with what he found to be the case himself. He says that the legal amount of alloy allowed in silver is that given below:—

Nga-yay (= ngàzègè), very rough, containing 1 tikal silver, tikal lead,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tikal copper.

Ah saik-gnway (= asèkkè), rough, contains 1 tikal silver,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tikal lead,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tikal copper.

Hnit-mat-gnway (= 'nasègè), 1 tikal silver,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tikal lead,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tikal copper.

The only value the above information has lies in the fact that it shows how silver was alloyed for currency. The standards above referred to would be 50%, 25% and 80% silver respectively: the last being apparently what he understood to be standard silver, a long way below ywètní or real standard silver.

The specimens figured in Plate I are:—sengājātkè, 15 per cent. alloy, fig. 10; asèkkè,<sup>36</sup> 25 per cent. alloy, fig. 11, which is the "oyster-shell silver" of Ridgeway (p. 22); lèzègè, 40 per cent. alloy, figs. 9 and 13. The quality of the sengājātkè and asèkkè specimens could be judged by their appearance, but I had to get the lèzègè specimen tested by the usual assay process before an opinion was passed on it.

Fig. 12, Plate I, represents a class of silver sometimes met with and called ngwèma "mother of silver." It has a fictitious value, as it is valued as a charm, because it contains within the bulge (visible in the figure) some grains of sand or grit, probably by an accident in the process of smelting, which make a sound when it is shaken.<sup>37</sup>

I have already remarked that value is estimated by reference to silver standards, and hence fineness or touch is itself reckoned in terms of tickals, mòs and pès, or more conveniently nowadays in terms of rupees, annas<sup>38</sup> and pies. All the names of standards in the lists above given are terms directly indicating touch on this principle.

<sup>35</sup> Toung Pao, Vol. II, p. 41. Hunter, who was in Pegu the year before Flouest, says much the same thing in his Pegu, p. 85:—"The purity of the silver, of which there are three degrees established by law or by custom; the 25 per cent., the 50 per cent. and the 75 per cent. The first has one-fourth part; the second one half; the third three-fourths of alloy."

<sup>36</sup> The word really means "one quarter alloy." The specimen given in the Plate has three small stamps on it, no doubt the mark of fineness; and so this particular piece should be referred to the class of stamped lumps. The specimen shown, however, was chosen for its remarkable freshness as an illustration, and it is not usual to find asèkkè silver stamped in any way. See later on. It is the ngwèr'ò, the "moderately alloyed" silver of Stevenson's Dict. He also gives it the name ngwèmwèl; (hairy silver) from the "hairy or feathery appearance (mwèngwèl dzung) on the surface of silver moderately alloyed."

<sup>37</sup> With this may be compared the term shwèmd, "mother of gold," which, however, Stevenson, Dict., says is "pure gold ore," meaning thereby (?) nuggets or gold-dust.

<sup>38</sup> The confusion between mòs and annas is nothing new, for Bayfield writing in 1836, says (Hill Tracts between Assam and Burmah, p. 229):—"Each Burman, Shan, or Singpho labourer pays six standard silver. Here he meant six mòs of ywètní or

A comparison of Prinsep's tables and statements<sup>39</sup> with those above given by myself will be found a useful contribution towards this phase of the present subject. I therefore record below what he has said word for word in his Useful Tables, merely changing the spelling of the Burmese words so as to conform with that above used.

In explanation of the terms used, he says, p. 36, that the following will serve as examples of the mode of evaluating bullion:—

Dain, kômúdet is dain 9 per cent. better (than ywetnt).

Dain, ngâmúdet is dain 5 per cent. better.

Ywetnt is standard (85 touch).

Ywetnt kyátké or taségé, is 1 tikal or 1/10 alloy (meaning 1/10 weight of alloy added to standard).

Ywetnt, chauksèngâjâtké, is 6 tens 5 tikal alloy (meaning 65 per cent. alloy added).

Ywetntjôé, half is ywetnt (and half alloy).

At p. 50 he gives the following valuable table of assay, in which the reader will find no difficulty in referring his transliterations to mine.

"A deduction of 1 per cent. should be expected from the produce of Ava Bullion on account of the vitreous coat of litharge which adheres to the lumps.

"This table is abstracted from the examination of 35 specimens of silver specially prepared in Ava, in presence of the Resident, purposely for the comparison of the Burmese with the English assay."

The lowest class of silver above noted is that containing 80 per cent. alloy, but Yule, Ava, p. 345, beats even this low rate by stating that, among the Shans, silver often contained fully 100 per cent. alloy. This would, however, mean strictly that there was no silver left, and what he really means, I take it, is a reference to the ngázégé or half silver standard, which of course contained only 50 per cent. alloy.

The great number of qualities of silver above noted is thus accounted for by Alexander Hamilton, East Indies, Vol. II, p. 43:—"Silver of any Sort is welcome to them (Peguers). It pays the King eight and an Half per cent. Custom, but in lieu of that high Duty, he indulges the Merchants to melt it down, and put what Alloy they please in it, and then pass it off in Payments as high as they can. Rupee Silver which has no Alloy in it, will bear twenty-eight per cent. of Copper-alloy, and keep the Pegu Touch, which they call flower'd Silver, and if it flowers, it passes current."

The above statement refers to dealings at about A.D. 1700 and proves that the standard silver of the Peguan Kingdom was of a most inferior quality, for assuming rupee silver to have always been about 94 per cent. of b'ò, or modern Burmese pure silver, the standard of old Peguan flower'd silver must have been about 66 per cent. of b'.<sup>40</sup>

I regret that I have been unable to find anywhere a table of Shan silver standards to compare with the Burmese, because it is pretty evident that the two nationalities have in reality much the same customs as to currency. A search through Cushing's Shan Dictionary would unearth a good many of the terms used by the Shans for silver and gold in their various forms, but unfortunately he never gives any definite renderings of the words he records. However, for future research it is something to have an idea as to what the terms are, and so I give here such as I have come across in my many wanderings through this valuable work.

K'am is gold, and we find, p. 79, k'amkik, pinchbeck (mojo); k'amyóngpin, very fine soft gold. Ngün is silver, and we have, p. 122, ngünkiá, very pure silver; ngüntēng, dain "silver"; ngünmaü, alloyed silver in cakes. Kiá is described as very pure silver, at p. 29, of two kinds, kiámais'e and kiápantang. T'ónk'ò is given at p. 268 as very pure silver, and is (?) thákwá silver. And at p. 479 we have lóng-ngün, flowered silver. At p. 375 are given pír "silver from the crucible, Shan silver, pure,"—the Burmese b'ò; and at p. 265 we have i' iú, "pure silver:" p. 459, lang, "very pure silver."

Then there is at p. 284 náraní and háraní, a good variety of gold, evidently the ndyànt-shwé and ndyáki-shwé of Stevenson's Burmese Dict.; but what standard of gold these words represent I do not know.

My own efforts in this direction are hardly more satisfactory, and I merely give the terms for what they may be worth, thus:—

Burmese.	Shan.
b'ò (but ? should be dain ).	ngündai .
chaubinbaur (but I think ywetní is meant).	nak'ònbàt .
chaubaukngwé ( chaubinbaur ).	ngünmai .
ngwélón .	múwain .
màjò (bad quality gold, half gold, billon).	taungná . <sup>41</sup>
(lowest quality silver).	ngünpadí , papa .

NEW LIGHT FROM PREHISTORIC INDIA.

BY PROF. PANCHANAN MITRA, M.A.; CALCUTTA.

I.—Scripts and Signs from Indian Neoliths.

IN the course of my studies of the prehistoric artifacts of India deposited in the Indian Museum (as arranged and catalogued recently by Mr. Coggin Brown), I began to come across distinct marks or etchings on some neolithic specimens. A list of these marks is given here and they are of special interest; not so much as giving us "marks" sometimes similar to those found by Mr. Yazdani from the prehistoric pottery of the Madras Museum (vide the Journal of the Hyderabad Archaeological Society, 1917, pp. 56--79), as being almost identical with some signs and scripts of prehistoric Egypt. Already the systematic search in Southern and Western Europe has brought to light marks belonging to prehistoric ages from various parts of the Iberian peninsula. Thus Estacio da Vieira<sup>1</sup> found them from Fonte Velha near Bensafrim, from Portella, the harbourside of Bartholomew de Messines, from Monte de Boi, from the environments of Martin Longo and other places of the provinces of Algarve and Almetjo and also in Minho and Traz-os-Montes. So also Delgado<sup>2</sup> reports similar marks from Alcala del Rio, northward of Seville and Gongora Y Martinez,<sup>3</sup> from Fuencaliente, the cave of the Letreros, cavern of Cero del Sol and other places of Andalusia. And the seven signs from Pouca d'Aguiar in the province of Traz-os-Montes in Portugal have been ascertained to be of alphabetic value and even to indicate a prayer to the Sun-god by Severo.<sup>4</sup> These belong to the early Neolithic period there, which is reckoned roughly as belonging at least to 5000 B.C.<sup>5</sup>

Similarly when dealing with the later brilliant Bronze Age of the Ægean culture area in the Histoire Ancienne dans l'Antiquité,<sup>6</sup> in 1894, Monsieur Perrot had felt justified in summing up as follows:—"The first characteristic which attracts the historian's notice when he tries to define pre-Homeric civilisation is that it is a stranger to the use of writing. It knows neither the ideographic signs possessed by Egypt and Chaldaea, nor the alphabet properly so called, which Greece was afterwards to borrow." Yet in 1893-4 seal-stones began to be discovered in Greece by Greville Chester<sup>7</sup> and Crete by Evans, and by the year 1895 it was possible to conclude, not only that the engravings of certain seal-stones showed all the characteristics of a system of writing, but even that the script was of the nature of a syllabary. If such was the state of affairs in Europe, no wonder that the reviewer of the Megalithic monuments of the Deccan would pass on with a hasty mention of some cup-markings,<sup>8</sup> and Brecks in his classic Primitive Tribes of the Neilgheries, while giving us a plate photographing a prehistoric cromlech at Melur with some evident inscriptions, did not care to describe what it was. But the pity is even

Bruce Foote, while pointing out that some of the prehistoric potteries contained "owner-ship-marks", and giving us in one of his plates (No. 47) of his second volume of Prehistoric and Proto-historic Antiquities some interesting pottery "marks", did not think they were worth a passing thought. It was only in 1917 that Mr. Yazdani, while conducting some excavations in Hyderabad cairns, being struck with the notable similarity of some prehistoric pottery marks with the Brāhmī script, his memory being still fresh with the inscriptions of the Maski edict, which he had to copy down, undertook a list of these marks which he published in a table as already mentioned. But so much were the Indian antiquarians prepossessed by the idea of the lateness of Indian script that the thought of its occurring in prehistoric artifacts in India got no place in their minds and so Mr. Coggin Brown naturally failed to notice that there were not only isolated marks on several but also continuous signs on two which bore his catalogue number. As soon as it was clear to me that definite continuous marks occurred on two Indian Neoliths I at once realised the immense value of these finds on the question of the origin of Indian script, and I lost no time to hasten upstairs to subject these specimens to the sound epigraphic knowledge of the officer in charge, Professor D. R. Bhandarkar. The eminent professor has already been kind enough to refer to these finds and now he deciphered one satisfactorily by finding out that the signs looked like primitive Brāhmī characters reversed and holding the thing before a mirror gave a reading which we would see has been corroborated by other evidence. The two Neoliths bearing continuous signs come from almost contiguous parts of North-Eastern India, the one from Assam and the other from Bihar.

The first one is a well-polished celt sharpened at the edge and narrowed near the top in the characteristic manner of specimens from Assam though not formed into well defined shoulders like some other beautiful artifacts of the locality. It bore the Catalogue No. 998 and apparently could not be traced after having been catalogued. What was remarkable about the script was a continuous line at the bottom which evidently had run into a perpendicular at the left extreme. This no doubt indicated that the script ran from right to left. It is hardly worth the while to point out that such writing has been considered to be the most ancient form in historical India and also that such specimens of Brāhmī and Kharoshṭī have been reported from Eran and North-Western India and none from the North-East. Moreover, the continuous line at the bottom naturally reminded me of the plate number XXXIV of Estacio da Viegas's Antiguidades monumentales de Algarve<sup>9</sup> figuring an inscription from Fonte Velha near Bensafrim in Bezirk-Lagoa, Portugal, which our Neolithic signs resemble most in the bold linear type of character measuring alike in both the cases nearly one mm. in length and ending also in a perpendicular at the left side of the line. It did not seem to have become independent of the bottom line or to have developed into the well-marked art of the linear script from Crete, tables of which have been given by Mr. Solomon Reinach in L'Anthropologie.<sup>10</sup> Besides the bottom line and the perpendicular at the left extreme, four distinct signs lying clearly apart from each other may be easily differentiated from each other. It is rather fortunate that within the last ten or twelve years prehistoric palaeography is being placed more and more on a very sound footing by a comparative study of the numerous signs unearthed from the Iberian peninsula, the Mediterranean culture area and prehistoric Asia Minor and Egypt. A systematic table of the signs have been given long ago by Horne in his Natur-und

Urgeschichte des Menschen and the latest can be found in the Scientia<sup>11</sup> from the learned pen of Doctor W. M. Flinders Petrie. If we take for granted that similar signs have similar acrophonic value and alphabetic character (which is not much doubtful) then we can read with the help of the last table at least three signs. The sign on the extreme left "L" is set down without any difficulty as identical with the Egyptian "Y" and also Carian sign for "Y" and the third from the left similarly to the sign for "I" in both these places. We should have been surprised if some of the signs from Assam had not presented some difficulty when being judged by a key which holds good of things from far-off Egypt. The second sign from the left resembles more a reversed Aśokan "ga" with the two lines more at right angles than the prehistoric Egyptian sign for "g" which can be said to be a reversed Aśokan "ga" with a short line joining the lower end at an acute angle. The fourth sign from the left appears to be even much more primitive. It harks back to the flag-like sign from the dolmens of Alvao in Portugal, but with this difference that the loop at the right hand top is not closed in the Assam specimen. It possibly represented the "A" vowel-stroke. The final perpendicular may be taken as a repetition of the "I" sign only joined at the bottom and lengthened a little or it might mark the end of the script in the same manner as the parichchheda mark at the end of a sentence in later days in India. Thus putting things together we get roughly a reading like "Y.G.I.A."

Now the surest test of the correctness of a reading is when it admits of a rational explanation and bears a meaning. In India alone probably of all countries of the world the hard setting of different cultures at different stages can be definitely ascertained, and thus to the wonder of the prehistoric archaeologist he can actually hear the language spoken which was perhaps the dominant tongue of a pushing race long before the Semitisation or Aryanisation of the world. Our hopes have not been belied and turning to the primitive tribes of Assam whence came our Neolith, we had little difficulty in tracing the meaning. A Khasi vocabulary and grammar would at once point out that "I" is the diminutive article of both genders as "U" is the masculine and "Ka" the feminine article and "gyo" in Burma and "khiw" in Khasi means a hoe, primitive in shape but still in use locally. Now, why a spade should be written a spade or a hoe, is clearly realised when we find from the following extract how the word is connected with the thunder-weapon in folk-lore especially in the neighbouring districts (vide Coggin Brown's article in Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, New Series, Vol. V, No. 8, 1909). Thus Mr. Gordon writes in his celebrated book The Khasis<sup>12</sup>: "Now the peculiarly shaped Khasi hoe or mo-khiw<sup>13</sup>, with its far-projecting shoulders, is merely an enlarged edition of the Naga hoe described by Peal and may therefore be regarded as a modern representative in iron, although on an enlarged scale, of the 'shoulder-headed celts.'" Another interesting point is that according to Forbes, the Burmese name for these stone-celts is mo-gyo. Now the Khasi name for the hoe is mo-khiw. The similarity between the two words seems very great. Forbes says the name "mo-gyo" in Burmese means "Cloud or sky-chain" which he interprets "thunderbolt", the popular belief there as in other countries being that these implements fell from heaven . . . . . When it is remembered that these stone-celts are of a different shape from that of the stone-implements which have been found in India (with the exception of Chota Nagpur) there would seem to be some ground for believing that the Khasis are connected with people who inhabited the Malay Peninsula and Chota Nagpur at the time of the Stone Age. That these peoples were, what Logan calls, the Mon-Annam may possibly be the case. Mr. Peal goes on to state "the discovery" is interesting for other reasons, as it possibly amounts to a demonstration that Logan (who it is believed was the first to draw attention to languages of the Mon-Annam or Mon-Khanver and those of the Mundas and the Khasis) was correct in assuming that at one time the Mon-Annam races and influence extended from the Vindhya all over the Ganges Basin, even over Assam, the northern border of the Ultra Indian Peninsula." So if we were disposed to think that a chance coincidence merely made the prehistoric palaeographic Egyptian key fit in to an Assam Neolith, the probability of correctness becomes more when the meaning is made clear and patent by a systematic anthropo-philological enquiry. What is rather more important and an interesting link in our arguments is convincing proofs have already been brought forward by a learned savant, Mr. H. Frey, in 1905 in Egyptiens préhistoriques identifiés avec les Annamites mainly on linguistic grounds, that the prehistoric Egyptians and the present Annamites, are identical. Thus he wrote in page 6: "We mean to state finally and principally and we hope to be able to impart the conviction to those who are interested by these studies, that the language spoken in Egypt in prehistoric epochs, that is to say, 6000 years and more before Christ, was none other than what is but spoken to-day by the Annamites and which in the monosyllabic form, as it then was, in some sort crystallised, (as much as time allowed has maintained) much of its primitive purity." We have already seen that the Khasi language bears marked affinities with the languages of the Annamite group. It is rather remarkable that the Khasis as they are, do not possess the art of writing and in fact they have adopted the English alphabet lately for their new growing literature. But still tradition is strong among them that they possessed the art of writing in some antediluvian age and they lost their book and arts while swimming for life during the flood.<sup>14</sup> Lastly, the following quotation gives us a clue that this Neolith inscribed in some ancient Khasi tongue was probably used as a token of submission<sup>15</sup> :—"The Rev. H. Roberts in his introduction to his Khasi Grammar states that tradition, such as it is, connects them politically with the Burmese to whose king they were up to a comparatively recent date rendering homage, by sending him an annual tribute in the shape of an axe, as an emblem of submission." To prehistoric archaeology, which saw its birth to make some Mullerian myths melt in air and unearthed the cup of Priam and the seals of Idomeneus' treasury, which has brought forth sure proofs of very ancient connections between such widely scattered tracts as Scandinavia or Spain and Crete or Egypt, and which is well nigh inclined to assign to a single race the thousands of megaliths spread almost all over the world, the connection between Neolithic Assam and predynastic Egypt is not much surprising. Some very interesting intermediate stages and 'missing links' will be adduced in the next two papers, which will go well nigh to demonstrate a great prehistoric Indian race, whom I should like to call Indo-Erythraean, was possibly responsible for some highly finished cultures, which almost simultaneously (or rather the more Eastern, the more ancient the culture) had its rise in prehistoric India, predynastic Egypt and proto-Sumer and Accad. And as botanists would call that land the place of origin where certain plants are still found wild, so anthropologists would tend strongly in favour of the land as the primitive and original home where the earliest wild stages are still as unmistakably found as the later higher developments clearly missed. Lastly, it must be remembered that if Petrie's arguments that proto-Egypt is the ultimate source of all prehistoric signs in Europe and Africa, as it possesses the largest number, is sound, prehistoric India is in a much more vantage ground, as Mr. Yazdani's already published signs, together with the signs found later by himself and me, far outweigh in number those from Egypt.

With these words I pass on to the other remarkable artifact, the piece of red earthy hæmatite whose very make suggests to Egyptian hieroglyph for representing roughly a 't' 'a' sound joined to the symbol for 'aah' . Its immediate deciphering speaks volumes of the soundness of the Indian palæography as well as the epigraphic abilities of Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar, whose reading has been more than amply justified by the hieroglyphic indication of the value of the artifact itself as well as independent evidence from another quarter. I may mention here that another small beautifully shaped Neolith (Catalogue No. 20991) is identical in shape with the Egyptian hieroglyphic sign for "R'd" or "R'j."

Coming now to the script itself, we start with the clue of the hieroglyphic determinative which gives us the idea that the word is an "aah-ta" ending word, so if any doubt remain that the word was to be read from the left to the right is at once done away with and we also get the value of the large symbol as "TA" and we have already stated that Prof. Bhandarkar's reading from the purely Indian palæographic standpoint gave us the identical value when it was taken for granted that it was a reverse Brâhmi "Ta", whose existence has always been pre-supposed from the older manner of writing of the Brâhmi script notably in Eran. Similarly the first symbol on the extreme right was once for all settled for "Ma" though the right hand horn on the loop forming a straight line with the right hand side of the loop itself showed that it was of considerable antiquity—much more anterior to the Eran form. For though historic palæography has a tendency to pre-suppose a later date, the straighter the lines, prehistoric palæography has given once for all the lie direct to it, for the more we go back for at least in the history of the prehistoric script in S.-W. Europe we do not often get the preceding picture-writing but definite bold stroke. It seems that to the earliest man as to the young child it was easier to give indiscriminate dots and dashes rather than faithful artistic representations of objects round them not to speak of attaching a philosophic or rationalistic symbolical meaning to them, which pre-supposes a considerable development of the intellect taking thousands of years in the history of human culture. It is for this reason perhaps that the Hieratic has been definitely disproved to be merely a cursive development of the Hieroglyphic, as archaeological excavations have given us a long series of its fore-runners at a time when probably the latter was unknown. That is why also, perhaps, pre-Columbian Mexico whose civilisation left little to be desired or at least was not at all rude and primitive, gloated in the possession of probably the best form of picture-writing the world has ever known. In short we are even tempted to say that the palæographer's occupation is gone in the face of Piette's epoch-making discoveries of the painted symbols from Masd'Azil of which the modest date would be more than 6000 B.C. and which give us the capital letters "E" or "I" or "L" in a form which leaves little to be desired in the twentieth century A.D. At least now no one should enter into the question of the origin of the alphabet in any part of the old world without full note of their long tale in the prehistoric dawn. These digressions apart, which were entered into merely to show that probably the laudable attempts of the great Cunningham to pre-suppose and evolve a fore-running Hieroglyph or Pictograph from the existing Brāhmī type were but love's labours lost, I pass on to the script in question which was deciphered as "Maata." We have already referred to the Acrophonic value of the artifact and now we would point out that "Maata" as an euphonym is very common amongst Egyptian sovereigns (witness name "Ra-maat" of queen Hatashu or Hatshepsheh). The word māt, mat, māt, meaning 'eye' also runs through several of the Mon-Annam languages to which the Munda of Chota Nagpur bears remarkable affinities, e.g., Mon, mat; Stieng, mat; Bahnar, mat; Annam, mat; Khasi, Khmat (dialectic māt); (vide Gurdon, p. 200).

Before passing on to other questions it is well to consider the probability of the knowledge of writing in Neolithic India. Bruce Foote in his masterly second volume on the Prehistoric and Proto-historic Antiquities (Notes on the Ages, etc., p. 15) points out: "That the Indian people of Palæolithic times did occasionally make drawings and engravements for special purposes, seem, however, more than probable, because implements suitable for the preparation of such drawings have been found, notably the 'chert-burin' from Jubbulpur resembling one from Les Eyzies." Thus what Masd'Azil has established in Europe, the Jubbulpur 'chert-burin' would lead us to in far-off India, namely, that alphabetiform signs (Alphabetartige Zeichen) first arose in the transitional period between the Palæolithic and the Neolithic ages. Moreover, graffiti etchings remarkably resembling those from the "Rein-deer" period of prehistoric Europe have been reported from Neolithic Kapgallu hills of the Bellary District. Similarly Mr. C. W. Anderson has reported of the Rock-paintings of Singapore in the Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society for September 1918, of which plate 8, depicting the folded palm of a hand, makes a near approach to the shape of our piece of Hematite.

Now not much doubt should remain as to the antiquity of our finds, which was collected by competent savants of the Geological Survey and catalogued as a genuine artifact of Neolithic India by the unassailable Indian geological and anthropological knowledge of Mr. Coggin Brown, as these Egyptian similarities unmistakably point to the same mysterious prehistoric connections to which I have referred already. At least the mere fact that Indian archaeology, which takes us back to Naks-i-Rustam and Behistun tablets of the sixth century B.C., has not a word to say on this shows how far anterior to that period would have been the time of the contact of the Egyptian and Indian cultures as there can be proved to have been some, by these and subsequent evidence. Here we have two Neoliths, one of which we have read with a key supplied by prehistoric Egypt and the other harking back to some characteristics which are unmistakably Egyptian, so can we not say that they belong to a time when either prehistoric India was being influenced by predynastic Egypt (for the key which we have used belongs to pre-hieroglyphic and proto-hieratic period) or vice versa, or a common culture was swaying both the lands? Though the prehistoric data from India have not yet been exhausted, five catalogues have already enabled me sufficiently to enter into the same interesting problem in a second paper on the vestiges of a prehistoric race of India and a third paper on the chronology of the Indian early Iron Age and it would be seen that the conclusions, which prehistoric palæography clearly hints at, would be rendered highly probable by a comparative study of some ancient skulls and would almost settle into a valid scientific induction by the tests of prehistoric archaeology and metallurgy of India.

One word more,—my friend Mr. S. Kumar who has piloted me often by giving me timely warnings of the pitfalls ahead suggested that these might be talismans or tribal sept-marks. It does justice to his strong commonsense and clear insight, for on turning over the pages of the Anthropological Journal, Man (1903, Article 28), at his suggestion I found that exactly the same doubts were thrown on Cretan stones when they were being unearthed in the late Nineties of the last century. But it is now held by a comparative study of talismans all over the world, that these are invariably bored for being used as pendants and both our Neoliths betrayed no trace of any boring. As to their being sept-marks, the mere fact that we have been able to decipher them by a key which reads alphabets and also that the reading has been rendered correct by the probable meanings which we have found quite suitable renders improbable the idea that they were mere uncouth symbols looked upon with reverential or superstitious awe.

Lastly, the "Maata" of our Neolith, written undoubtedly with reverse. Brâhmi characters according to Prof. Bhandarkar (who was kind enough to point out also that the reverse form could not have been due to its being used as a seal for the signs were inscribed or rather etched in very narrow lines on a very uneven part and thus could not have been meant for impression elsewhere), means a headman or chieftain. We have seen it forming a part of Egyptian royal names. It survives to-day curiously enough, such is the degradation of words brought about probably by social circumstances in the lowest degraded class in India, the cleaners of refuse—the "mehtar" and the "mehtua." Russell and, if I remember right, also Risley, have long ago pointed out that the word "mehtar" means a prince or head-man. The very depth of the social scale to which these peoples have sunk, shows the vast lapse of ages which must have gone by since the time these very people were actually princes and chieftains, from which position they sank and sank till the last of Indian primitive conquerors who gave it its dominant culture, the Sindhu-bank dwellers—the Hindus—came from the direction of "Ariane" and evolved a rigid social system which has shown little signs of any great modification since those ancient times, except it be in these days of mass education and British enlightenment. So these words, as it were, gives a side-light to those remote Neolithic pre-Aryan times, when a piece of red earthy hæmatite much-prized by prehistoric Indians, shaped in a beautiful symbolical manner and inscribed with a word meaning a leader, might have been part of the paraphernalia of some pre-Aryan patriarchal ruler. Now it is well known that village government has often been shown by others to be of South Indian pre-Aryan (Dravidian or pre-Dravidian) origin. And as village government in India was seldom touched by the imperial ruler of India and has gone on in much the same way for thousands of years, I am inclined to think that we can still trace the rule of a Maata in the modern village headman "Mahto", which word should not be connected by false philology with the much later Sanskrit word "Mahat" as Prof. Bhandarkar pointed out that in Sanskrit the word for a chief is "Mahattara" and "Mahattama", the comparative and superlative forms and not simply "Mahat." It seems very probable that the non-Aryan word "Mehetar" was identified with Sanskrit "Mahattara" and by false analogy the superlative "Mahattama" also came into being. About the modern "Mahto" rule I would refer to Russell's Tribes and Castes, etc., Vol. I, p. 386, and Risley's Tribes and Castes of

Bengal, Vol. II, pp. 43-44, and also give the following excerpt from the Census of India, 1911, Vol. V, Part I, p. 466:—

"In Shahabad every goala village has a head-man called 'Mahto' for a group of villages, and in the case of towns for the whole of the town, there is a superior caste official who is called 'Barka-Mahto,' i.e. a 'Mahto' of 12 villages. When a breach of caste rule takes place the village 'Mahto' is first informed about it. In petty cases he gives judgment in consultation with the castemen of the village. In serious cases the 'Barko-Mahto' is referred to, and general panchayet of all the castemen in the villages under him is convoked. Among other sub-castes (except the Goria), the panchayet's jurisdiction is restricted to a group of villages, the head of which is called a 'Mahto.'

Russell and Risley make it clear (vide references ante) that this term is very common amongst the goalas. However much these may have a tendency recently to group themselves under the third Aryan caste group, the Vaishyas, the following extract from Captain Mackintosh's Account of the Mhadgo Kolies<sup>16</sup> would make it clear that they clutched quite a different tradition about their origin, when modern education had not yet percolated to them, on the strength of which they may be with a fair degree of probability ascribed to be remnants of a pre-Aryan Megalith-rearing race of the Deccan:—

"There is a popular tradition among the people in that part of the country, that the Goursees were the original inhabitants of the Dukhan, and that they were displaced from the hilly tracts of the country by the race of Goullies or cowherds. These Goullies, it is said, subsequently rebelled against their lawful prince, who detached an army that continued increasing in their exertion until they exterminated the entire race of Goullies. It is a common practice with such of the inhabitants of the plains as bury their dead as well as the hill-tribes to erect thurgahs (tombs commonly of a single stone) near the graves of their parents. In the vicinity of some of the Koly villages and near the site of deserted ones, several of those thurgahs are occasionally to be seen, especially near the source of the Bhaum river. The people say they belong to the Goursees and Goullies of former times. The stones, with many figures in relief roughly carved upon and one of them holding a drum in his hand and in the act of beating tune on it, are considered to have belonged to the Goursees who are musicians by profession. The other thurgahs with a saloonka (one of the emblems of Mhadgo) and a band of women forming a circle round it with large pots on their heads, are said to be Gouilly monuments. This may be reckoned partly confirmatory of the tradition."

THE HUN PROBLEM IN INDIAN HISTORY.<sup>1</sup>

By PROF. S. KRISHNASWAMI AYYANGAR, M.A.; MADRAS.

The Huns were an Asiatic people who, according to accepted history, dominated the world during the 4th and 5th centuries of the Christian era. Gibbon says of them: "The Western world was oppressed by the Goths and Vandals who fled before the Huns; but the achievements of the Huns themselves were not adequate to their power and prosperity. Their victorious hordes had spread from the Volga to the Danube, but the public force was exhausted by the discord of independent chieftains; their valour was idly consumed in obscure and predatory excursions; and they often degraded their national dignity by condescending, for the hope of spoil, to enlist under the banners of their fugitive enemies. In the reign of Attila, the Huns again became the terror of the world, and I shall now describe the character and actions of that formidable Barbarian, who alternately insulted and invaded the East and the West, and urged the rapid downfall of the Roman Empire.

"In the tide of emigration which impetuously rolled from the confines of China to those of Germany, the most powerful and populous tribes may commonly be found on the verge of the Roman provinces. Their accumulated weight was sustained for a while by artificial barriers; and the easy condescension of the emperors invited, without satisfying, the insolent demands of the Barbarians who had acquired an eager appetite for the luxuries of civilized life.

"Attila, the son of Mundzuk, deduced his noble, perhaps his regal, descent from the ancient Huns, who had formerly contended with the monarchs of China. His features, according to the observation of a Gothic historian, bore the stamp of his national origin; and the portrait of Attila exhibits the genuine deformity of a modern Calmuck: a large head, a swarthy complexion, small, deep-seated eyes, a flat nose, a few hairs in the place of a beard, broad shoulders, and a short square body, of nervous strength, though of a disproportioned form. The haughty step and demeanour of the king of the Huns expressed the consciousness of his superiority above the rest of mankind; and he had a custom of fiercely rolling his eyes, as if he wished to enjoy the terror which he inspired."<sup>2</sup>

The Huns in the East.

At the other extremity of their influence at about the same period, a more recent historian has the following:—"Référence has already been made to the Yueh-Chi as having in 163 B.C. dispossessed the Sakas from their habitat in the Tarim Basin. In 120 B.C. the Yueh-Chi drove the Sakas out of Bactria, which they occupied and which remained their centre for many generations. In 30 B.C. one of their tribes, the Kwei-Shang, subdued the others, and the nation became known to the Romans as the Kushan. Antony sent ambassadors to this people and Kushan chiefs appeared in Rome during the reign of Augustus. Their power gradually waned, and they were finally supplanted by a race known to the Chinese as the Yetha, to the classical writers as the Ephthalites or White Huns, and to the Persians as the Haythal: the new-comers, though of a similar stock, were entirely distinct from the Yueh-Chi whom they drove out. This powerful tribe crossed the Oxus about A.D. 425, and according to the Persian chroniclers the news of their invasion caused a widespread panic."<sup>3</sup>

These Huns seem to have made their appearance first on the eastern frontier of Persia about the year 350 in the reign of the Persian King, Shapur the Great, and, according to Persian historians, Shapur defeated them and made them enter into a treaty with him so far successfully that, when he had to go to war against Rome a few years after, he was supported by an army of these Huns; but soon after the year A.D. 425, when they crossed the Oxus, Bahram Gur defeated them completely and made them cross the Oxus back again for the time being. Though defeated for the while, the White Huns hung like a cloud on the eastern frontier of Persia and constituted the principal pre-occupation of the Persian monarchs that succeeded him. After a prolonged series of operations, Shah Firuz of Persia suffered in A.D. 483 a crushing defeat from the "Khush-Newaz", the High-minded, and he himself fell in the battle. What was worse for Persia, the White Hun monarch imposed a tribute on the Great King who succeeded Firuz, which was paid for two years. It was left to a son of this valiant Firuz, Kobad by name, to destroy the power of these Huns. After a war which lasted from A.D. 503, to 513 he defeated them, and the White Hun peril which had threatened Iran for so long had passed away.

The Huns in India.

It is these Ephthalites or the White Huns that figure prominently in the History of India of the same period. Their first appearance so far as is known to us at present was in the reign of the early Gupta Emperor, Kumāragupta, whose death took place in A.D. 455. He suffered a defeat at the hands of the Huns, serious enough to shake the foundations of the empire; but the disaster was averted by the energy of his son Skandagupta, who inflicted a crushing defeat on the Barbarians and averted the danger for the time, about the year A.D. 455. The Huns appeared again barely ten years after, about A.D. 465, occupying Gandhāra, the North-Western Punjab. Five years after this they advanced further into the interior and Skandagupta's exertions to stem the tide of the invasion were not uniformly successful. Under his weaker successors, they continued their advance till they were completely defeated some years before A.D. 533, either by a combination of Narasimha Gupta Bālāditya, the Gupta ruler, and Yasodharman of Malva (either as a subordinate, or more likely as an independent ruler); or each of these inflicted a separate defeat upon these Huns. We have records of two Hun rulers in India, father and son, by name Toramana and Mihiragula. Mihiragula, the Gollas of Cosmos Indikopleustes, is described by Hsuen-Tsang as "a bold intrepid man of great ability and all the neighbouring states were his vassals." He wished to study Buddhism and the Buddhists put up a talkative servant to discuss the Buddha's teachings with the king. Enraged at the insult he ordered the utter extermination of the Buddhist Church in his dominions. When he recovered from the defeat at the hands of Bālāditya, he found that his place was not available to him. His younger brother having taken possession of the throne, he took refuge in Kashmir, and here he repaid hospitality by treachery and having murdered the king he made himself ruler. Then he renewed his project of exterminating Buddhism, and with this view he caused the demolition of 1600 stupas and monasteries, and put to death nine śrīs of lay adherents of Buddhism. His career was cut short by his sudden death, and the air was darkened, and the earth quaked, and fierce winds rushed forth as he went down to the Hell of unceasing torment.<sup>4</sup>

What the Hindu and Jain sources have to say of him is no less gruesome, and he was taken away to the relief of suffering humanity.

The Huns in Indian Literature—Kālidāsa.

It is the invasion of the Huns and the particular period of active migration of this nomadic people that scholars have laid hold of in connection with all references that may be found to the Huns in Indian literature. One of these latter references is contained in the Raghuvamśa of Kālidāsa. Among the many achievements of the hero has to figure, according to accepted canons of literary criticism, a description of his conquest of the four quarters. This forms Book IV of the work. Ślokas 60—80 of this book give the details of the western conquests of Raghu and his progress northwards till he crossed the Himalayas back into the Madhyadēśa of the ancients. The geography of this progress is worth careful study. Raghu is brought in victorious career along the west coast to Trikūṭa, which is west Avanti on the farther side of the Vindhya. Then he started for the conquest of the Pārasika by the landway. He left the field of the battle with the army of cavalry of the westerners covered with the bearded heads, cut off by the crescent darts of his bowman. He magnanimously pardoned the survivors who surrendered to him with their turbans removed. The victors rid themselves of the fatigues of the battle by draughts of wine in the surrounding vineyards in which sheets of leather were spread for seats. Then he set forward northwards as if he were bent upon uprooting the northern monarchs. By rolling on the banks of the Sindhu (Vanikṣu) the horses of Raghu's army not only got rid of the fatigues of the journey but also shook off the pollen of the saffron flowers sticking in their manes. The display of his valour on their husbands exhibited itself by the red colour in the cheeks of the Hūna Woman.<sup>5</sup> The Kambojas unable to resist his valour bent down before him as did their Walnut (Akṣoda) trees broken by his elephants tied to them. They sent in their tributes in heaps of gold and herds of horses repeatedly, pride never entering the mind of Raghu all the same.

Then he ascended the Himalayas, the mountain-father of Gauri, the mineral dust raised by his cavalry appearing to be intended to enhance the heights of its peaks. The breeze rustling among the birch-leaves, and whistling musically among the bamboos, carried the spray droplets of Ganges water which refreshed him on the way.

The Kirātas who reached his abandoned camps learned the height of his elephants from the marks on the deodars left by the neck-ropes of these elephants.

Raghu fought a fierce battle with the Pārvatīyas (the seven gaṇas of Utsavaśaṅkētas). Having made them lose the taste for war, he got his psalm of victory sung by the Kinnaras.

Having raised his pile of unassailable glory on the Himalayas as if to put to shame the Rāvaṇa-shaken Kailāsa of Śiva, Raghu descended the Himalayas.

Criticism of the Reference.

The substance of the twenty stanzas of the book given above, gives a sufficiently correct indication of the point of view of the author though three points of view seem possible. In such connections an author may simply follow a conventional method in which states and parties are alike figments of the imagination; he may equip himself with such historical information as may be available to him and try to project the political condition of the age of his hero; or he may just project anachronistically the political condition of his own age. Which exactly is the actual point of view of the author in any particular case has to be settled upon its own merits in each case, and the decision will depend upon the actual knowledge of the age it is possible for us to bring to bear upon the question. Profoundly well-read in the Epics and the Purāṇas, as Kālidāsa apparently was, he does not appear to follow the Paurāṇic convention in this case. It is well on the surface that he does not quite attempt the historical surroundings of the age of Raghu, as a comparison of this progress with the corresponding section of the Rāmāyaṇa or the Mahābhārata will abundantly show. It is in all probability, the third course that he has adopted in this case, and has tried to depict the political surroundings of his own age. On this assumption it is that those scholars who have investigated the question have ascribed to Kālidāsa the particular historical periods to which they ascribe him, rejecting as untenable the traditional age of Vikramāditya of Ujjain. It will appear in the course of our study of the history of the Hūnas, that this settlement so far, at any rate, as it rests upon Kālidāsa's reference to the Hūnas, is anything but the crucial test that it is but too readily taken to be.

The Geographical Data of Kālidāsa.

Let us examine the test a little more closely. Kālidāsa leads Raghu from Trikūṭa by the landway to Pārasika which must be Fars (ancient Persia) from which the name has descended to the whole country. The specific mention of the landway suggests that the usual way was the waterway. If Raghu came from Aparānta, (the Bombay Coast) he must have crossed the Vindhya near the west end through his own Anḍpa, and Trikūṭa must be located in the Western parts of Central India, the roadway must then go across the margin of the desert to Sukkur, and thence by way of the Bolan Pass to the Kojak Amran mountains, winding round them to Girishk, and thence across to South Persia along the Helmand, that is, the region of Persia hallowed by the early activity of Zoroaster and his patron Darius Hystapes. Then follow some points of detail which indicate accurate knowledge of the characteristics of the Persians and the Parthians before them. They were both of them essentially horsemen, and the Pārasikas are described in the poem. When they were defeated, and they resolved to surrender, the usual custom among them was to take off their turbans, throw them round their necks and appear as supplicants. Whether the term "Apanīta Sirastrāṇa" conveys all this it would be hard to say, but it seems unmistakably to indicate this peculiarity of the Persians. Both Persians and Parthians were alike bearded men, as the poem says.

Having conquered these, Raghu starts northwards as if to uproot the kings of the northern people—among whom figure only two, the Hūnas and Kāmbojas. As a clear indication of what this north means we are given the specific hint (in śloka 87) that the banks of the Sindhu were reached. The word Sindhu is more likely to be a misreading, as six manuscripts out of the nine have Vaṅkṣu instead of Sindhu. The most popular and authoritative commentator among these, Mallinātha, adopting the reading Sindhu, gives the meaning a nada in Kashmere, meaning a westward flowing river, according to his own definition. He has been driven to this by the obvious unsuitability of the ordinary significance of the word Sindhu.<sup>5</sup> It is very likely that the correct reading is Vaṅkṣu. If it is so, what is Vaṅkṣu? This is usually identified with the river Oxus, which is derived from the term Vakṣu or Vaṅkṣu. The Oxus is a long river the sources of which lie not far from the Pamirs, and its course then lay across the whole width of Mid-Asia from the Pamirs to the Caspian Sea. The Vaṅkṣu is not the Oxus, however, but is the name of one of the many tributaries which pour their tribute of water into the actually smaller Oxus to make it the great river. Among four such in the upper reaches of the Oxus, there are two, Wakshab and Akshab, between which lay Khuttal, as it is called by Arab geographers, but Haytal by the ancient Persians, from which the name Ephthalites was given to the later Huns. The Wakshab of the Arabs is apparently the Vañkṣu referred to by Kālidāsa, by far the greatest tributary of the Oxus.

Immediately to the east of this and enclosed in a huge semi-circular bend of the Oxus is the division known by the name Badakshan, 'a country in which rivers carried down gold sands.' To the east of this again and reaching almost to the very source of the Oxus lay Wakh-Khan, which brings us to the very frontiers of Kashmir, but on the farther side of the Karakoram branch of the Himalaya mountains. There is but a narrow strip of country at the foot of the Pamir between the upper course of the Indus, the sources of the Oxus and those of the Yarkhand river, which in mediæval times formed the road of communication between Turkistan and Tibet. The junction of the Wakshab is reached from Balkh by a road going into the territory of Khuttal, a little to the east of the junction,<sup>1</sup> and if Kālidāsa had any roadway in this region in his mind, Raghu's march must have taken the road that Alexander took, up to Balkh and then turned north-eastward from Balkh, through Badakshan and Wakh-Khan to the frontier of Kamboja, instead of the slightly north-western road which led into Sugd, the Sogdiana of the Greeks. There is then another point for remark in this connection. This itinerary for Raghu seems to mark the outer boundary in the west and north-west of India from the Achæmenian times onwards almost up to the middle of the 3rd century A.D., if not even up to the time of Yuan Chwang (Hiuen-Tsiang).

Raghu marched eastwards from the Vañkṣu apparently till he reached the frontiers of the Kambojas who submitted without a fight. After this it is that he began his ascent of the Himalayas. There is a well-known route for commerce through Ladak and eastern Kashmere into Tibet, but the region was occupied by the warlike Daradas (Dards).<sup>2</sup> Raghu's route according to Kālidāsa, must have lain further east as there is no mention of these Daradas, and as śloka 73 states that his army was refreshed, on its laborious mountain journey, by the breezes from the Ganges. There is the further reference (in śloka 80) to the Kailāsa being perhaps in view. He then descended the Himalayas probably by the passes of Gangotri and Kêdarnāth into the Doab between the Ganges and the Jumna. Here ends this part of his victorious progress, Kālidāsa transferring him to the banks of the Lauhitya (Brahmaputra) immediately on his eastern conquests.

The real question requiring explanation.

This detailed investigation makes it clear that at the period of time referred to by Kālidāsa in this connection, the Huns were in that particular region on the northern banks of the Oxus, which became characteristically their own in the centuries of their active domination both over Asia and Europe, that is, in the 4th and 5th centuries A.D. When they actually did come in there, and whether those that were in occupation of that region before them could by any means be known to the Indians of their days by the name Hun or Hūṣa are points on which light would be welcome.

The Hun in Chinese History.

The name Hūṣa can be traced back in Chinese history to the very beginnings of the history of that country. These were a people who occupied the north-western corner of China proper and were known to the neighbouring Chinese under three forms of the name, written differently no doubt but pronounced exactly alike. Their earliest name seems to have been Hiün-Yu, the first part being Hun or Kun indifferently; later they were called Hien Yün, and finally Hiung-Nu, the common sound of all these being Hun. This takes on an affix 'U' in Persian becoming Hunu, Sansk. Hūṇa. These Hiung-Nu were the leaders of the Turkish, Mongolian, and Hunnu peoples, who overran the continent of Eurasia in the centuries above referred to. They referred themselves to the dynasty of Hsia, founded by the great Yu, son of the minister Kun in B.C. 2205. The seventeenth ruler of this dynasty was banished in 1766 B.C., because he was a tyrant. His son Shun-wei migrated with 500 members of the family of Hsia to the northern borders of the district of China, and these, Chinese tradition referred to as the forefathers of the Hiung-Nu. Dr. F. Hirth says: "Under Huang-Ti, we find the first mention of a nation called Hun-Yu, who occupied the north of his empire and with whom he is represented to have engaged in warfare. The Chinese identified this name with that of the Hiung-Nu, their old hereditary enemy and the ancestors of Attila's Huns. Even though the details of these legendary accounts may deserve little confidence, there must have been an old tradition that a nation called Hun-Yu, occupying the northern confines of China, were the ancestors of Hiung-Nu tribes, well-known in historical times, a scion of whose great Khans settled in the territory belonging to the king of Sogdiana during the first century B.C., levied tribute from his neighbours, the Alans, and with his small but warlike hordes initiated that era of migrations, which led to the over-running of Europe with central Asiatic Tatars."<sup>9</sup> Coming down the centuries, the kingdom of China broke up in the seventh century B.C. into seven feudal kingdoms: Tshu, Chao, Wei, Han, Yen-Chao and Ts'i, and Ts'in. Of these the northern kingdoms Yen-Chao and Ts'in were neighbours of the Hiung-Nu. In the year 321 B.C., and again three years after, the first six of these kingdoms under the leadership of the Hiung-Nu attacked the Ts'in dynasty. The allies were, however, entirely conquered by the Ts'in, and Shi-Huang-Ti of the Ts'in dynasty became the first universal emperor about the year 246 B.C. This emperor made Hien Yang (the modern Si-Gan Fu) his capital. He abolished the feudal system and divided the country into provinces over which he set governors directly responsible to himself. He was also the author of roads, canals, and other useful public works, and having assured himself of order in the interior of his kingdom, he proceeded against his enemies, chief among whom were the Hiung-Nu Tatars, whose attack for years had been disconcerting to the Chinese, and the neighbouring principalities. He exterminated those of the Hiung-Nu that were in the neighbourhood of China and drove the rest of them into Mongolia. Overcoming his enemies on the other frontier as well, he extended the empire to make it of the same extent as that of modern China proper. As a protection against the repetition of attacks by the Hiung-Nu, he supplemented the efforts of the three northern states by completing the great wall of China along the northern frontier extending from the sea to the farthest western frontier of the province Kan-Suh. This great work was begun under his immediate supervision in 214 B.C. Finding schoolmen and pedants holding up to the admiration of the people, the feudal system that he overthrew, he ordered the destruction of all books having reference to the past history of his empire. But the result of this piece of vandalism was a great deal undone by his successor Hwei-Ti (194—179 B.C.), the contemporary of our Pushyamitra and Khāravela, and of the Bactro-Indian Greek Menander, the Milinda of the Buddhists.

The Huns and the Yueh-Chi.

During the last years of Shi Huang-Ti, the Hiung-Nu Shan-Yu, Teu-Man by name, was driven from the throne and murdered by his son Mao-Tun in the year 209 B.C. Subjugating twenty-six of his neighbouring tribes, Mao-Tun extended his kingdom from the Sea of Japan to the river Volga. At the head of an army of 300,000 men he recovered from the Chinese all the northern territory inside the great wall, which they had seized from his father. The Han ruler Hwei-Ti (194—179 B.C.), when he ascended the throne, started by giving every encouragement to the literature and doing all that was possible for him to undo the destruction brought about by Shi-Huang-Ti. During his reign, the empire enjoyed internal peace, but there was only one enemy on the frontiers and that was the Hiung-Nu people. They suffered many defeats in their attacks upon his empire; and, thwarted in their attacks on China, they spent their fury upon the kingdom of the Yueh-Chi, which had grown up in the western extremity of Kan-Suh. The Yueh-Chi were all dislodged from their place and driven away to the territory beyond the Tianshan mountains between Turkistan and the Caspian Sea. The Chinese emperor attempted to form an alliance with the Yueh-Chi against the Hiung-Nu and ultimately succeeded. Chang'ien, the ambassador sent on this commission, was able to visit Bactria, which was a recent conquest of the Yueh-Chi and when there his attention was first drawn to the existence of India. It was during this visit of his that numerous elements of culture, plants and animals were imported for the first time from the west into China. Under Wu-Ti (140-86 B.C.) the power of the Hiung-Nu was broken and Eastern Turkistan became a Chinese Colony through which caravans could go forward and backward in safety, carrying merchandise and art treasures from Persia and the Roman market. About the beginning of the Christian era, the Han power was overthrown, and there was civil disorder till a prince of this dynasty was able to make his position secure from about A. D. 58. It was in the reign of his successor that Buddhism was introduced from India into China in A.D. 65 under Ming-Ti. It was about the same time that the celebrated general Pan-Chao went on an embassy to the king of Shen-Shen in Turkistan, and brought under Chinese influence the states of Shen-Shen, Khoten, Kucha, and Kashgar, all on the northern frontiers of Trans-Himalayan India. It was after this period that the northern Hiung-Nu were finally dislodged from their place. They came and settled in the neighbourhood of the Sogdians, "conquered the Alans, called prior to the Christian era Yen-Ts'ai (Massagetæ), killed their king, and captured their country whereby, under the name of Huns, they were the cause of the folk migrations, which have recently been proven by the German Sinologist, Dr. Hirth, in numerous dissertations."<sup>10</sup> The southern Hiung-Nu, on the other hand, later acknowledge the supremacy of China after their last Shan-Yu had abdicated in favour of the Chinese emperor in A.D. 215. When the central power of China grew weak in the third century A.D. owing to its division into three independent kingdoms, often quarrelling with one another, the Hiung-Nu renewed their incursions into the empire in the beginning of the 4th century. The weakening of the Chinese empire naturally was the occasion for the Hiung-Nu, who in their now familiar name Huns, spread themselves from the frontiers of the Roman Empire to those of India.

The Hiung-Nu—Hun theory.

In regard to this Hiung-Nu being the Huns, there were three theories that held the field till within recent times. The first is the Hiung-Nu—Hun theory, the second Hiung-Nu—Turk theory, the third Hiung-Nu—Mongol. It is the first, that the Hiung-Nu were the Huns, that has the best authority at present, and the proof of this rests upon several facts other than geographical. In the Latin map of St. Hieronymus, preserved in the British Museum in London, there appears the name Huniscite in the neighbourhood of the Chinese Empire. This map was compiled between the years A.D. 376 and 420, when the Huns were already in Europe. The appearance of this name on this map is remarkable, though it is scored out on the map itself as it is at present, and "Seres Oppidum" inserted close to it. Scholars now hold that this correction was made by the geographer Orosius, (a pupil of St. Hieronymus) whose geography was translated into English by King Alfred. In this geography, the compound folk name Huni-Scythæ occurs. What is more remarkable is that this name occurs in the neighbourhood of Otorokorra (Uttarakuru). It is generally believed now that this Orosius introduced the correction on the map of errors copied either from the Latin map, drawn on the Wall of Polla Hall in Rome, under the orders of the emperor Augustus in 7 B.C., or from the work Orbis Pictus of Agrippa, which was in general use. "The Latin writers therefore of the Hiung-Nu age had really heard of the Hun under the Chinese Great Wall, although they did not know their history." <sup>11</sup>

Among Strabo's notices of India, we find the statement that "The Greeks who occasioned its (Bactria's) revolt became so powerful by means of its fertility and advantages of the country that they became masters of Ariana and India, according to Apollodoros of Artemita. Their chiefs, particularly Menander, (if he really crossed the Hypanis to the east and reached Isamus), conquered more nations than Alexander. These conquests were achieved partly by Menander, partly by Demetrius, son of Euthydemus, king of the Bactrians. They got possession not only of Patalene but of the kingdom of Saraoetus, and Sigerdia, which constitute the remainder of the coast. Apollodoros, in short, says that Bactriana is the ornament of all Ariana. They extended their empire even as far as the Seres and Phryni." <sup>12</sup>

The Huns : the Fauni of Strabo.

In this extract where the boundary of Bactria in her best days is referred to as the Seres and Phryni, it is now clearly demonstrated that the second word Phryni is an error for Fauni, which in the sense of forest-folk, finds support in the Gothic tradition concerning the origin of the Hiung-Nu. The following extract from the Gothic historian Cassiodorus, as preserved in other works, shows clearly that the Huns were forest men born of Hun fathers and Maga mothers :—

"In those days the Hun people, who for a long time had been living enclosed in inaccessible mountain fastnesses, made a violent attack upon the people, the Goths, whom they harassed to the utmost, and finally drove out of their old habitations, which they then took possession of for themselves. This warlike people originated, according to the traditions of hoary antiquity, in the following manner :

"Filimer, King of the Goths, son of Gadaric the Great, who was the fifth in succession to hold the rule of the Getæ after their migration from the island of Scandza, and who, as we have said, entered the lands of Scythia with his tribe, got to know of the presence among his people of certain 'Maga women', who in Gothic language are called Alirumna. Suspecting these women he expelled them from the midst of his race, and compelled them to wander in solitary exile far from his army." <sup>13</sup>

<sup>11</sup> For this and various other points in this matter, I am indebted to the article "Hiung-Nu—Hun Identity" by Kálmán Némethi in the Asiatic Quarterly Review for April 1919.

Menander and the Huns.

This idea of forest-spirits is found supported by another designation given to these people, namely, Spiritus Immundis, which means demons, and can be equated with the expression Fauni Ficari on the authority of the Church Father, St. Hieronymus. This idea of the Huns being regarded as forest-spirits is in keeping with the notion Dæva (Demon) of the Zend Avesta. That the Hiung-Nu on the Chinese borders, were the people known to the early Latin and Greek writers under the name Fauni, finds historical support from the dating of Strabo's reference to them. According to Strabo's geography Menander extended his borders up to the frontiers of the Chinese empire and the Fauni in the year 190 B.C. The period of Menander would correspond to the reign of Hwei-Ti of the Han dynasty. The Fauni kingdom, of which Apollodorus of Artemita gives an account in his Parthica, could be no other than the Hiung-Nu kingdom, which at the time happened to be ruled over by one of their most powerful Shan-Yuë, Mao-Tun, the Attila of the Hiung-Nu people. Beyond this mere synchroism, there is the startling testimony that these Hiung-Nu were also known to the Chinese by another name Kuy-Fang, where the first word means as much as a demon, and this designation for the Hiung-Nu occurs in the Chinese text, which says clearly that the Yin called the people Kwei-fang whom the Han designated Hiung-Nu. It is also noteworthy that it is the Second Dynasty that called them by this name. The second word 'fang' probably meant the district. This notion is confirmed in what the early Chinese historian See-ma-Chang has to say about it. "According to See-ma-Chang, the Hiun-Yu in the time of Yao-Shon were called the mountain Yong or Hiun-Yu; in the time of Hia, Shon-Wei; in the time of In dynasty, their land was Kuy-fang; in the time of the Chao they were called Hiun-Yun, and in the time of the Han, Hiung-Nu."<sup>14</sup>

It thus becomes clear that the Hiung-Nu of the Chinese were considered by the Chinese themselves at a particular period of their history as something analogous to demons, and this notion got abroad in the folk-name Fauni of Strabo's geography, and in the Gothic tradition regarding the paternal stock of the Huns. Therefore, it may be taken as satisfactorily proved that the Hiung-Nu and the Huns were in the estimation of their neighbours the same people.

The maternal stock of the Huns—the Massagetæ.

In regard to the maternal stock of the Huns, the Maga women must have belonged to the Getæ, who were also in the neighbourhood of China. All the contemporary historians of the Huns knew them only either as originating from the Massagetæ that came later to be called the Huns, according to the concurrent testimony of the Greek, Roman and Latin historians, who all state "that the Huns lived among the most dreaded of people, the Massagetæ." There is besides the clear statement of Ammianus Marcellinus, who "records that the Huns in every respect were similar to the Alans, who lived in that stretch of country from the river Don to the Indus, formerly known by the name Massagetæ." The Chinese called these people before they were conquered by the Hiung-Nu, An-Ts'ai, or according to the present pronunciation Yen-Ts'ai. Therefore then the people, called Massagetæ by the Latins and Greeks, were known to the Chinese as An-Ts'ai. The notion of Maga women as connected with the Huns seems to have had its origin in the general notion that they were associated with Witchcraft and as such being fit mothers for the demon-breed of the Huns.

Indian evidence on the question.

But coming down to the Indian side of the evidence, we have already noticed that in the geography of Orosius, the characteristic Huni-Scythæ name occurs in the neighbourhood of Uttarakuru. The term Uttarakuru designated according to the Indian authorities a race of people on the other side of the Himalayas. The Paurāṇic associations of these people give them an unbelievable longevity and ascribe to them other attributes which remove them from the realm of an actual race of people. This notion of their being a legendary people gets only confirmed by the early Greek accounts of them, which describe them as they do the Hyperboreans of the Greeks. The Mahābhārata refers to them as quite an earthly people among whom polyandry prevailed in the days of Pāṇḍu.<sup>15</sup> But if we get back to the earlier literature of the Hindus, we seem to be on more historical ground, and the Uttarakuru would be a race of human people, who lived on the other side of the Himalayas. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>16</sup> describes them merely as located beyond the Himalayas. Their country is described as 'the lands of the gods' no doubt, but it is at the same time stated that the disciple of Vasiṣṭha Satyahavya, by name Jānantapi Atyarāti, was anxious to conquer it. It cannot therefore be regarded as mythical. They are generally mentioned in connection with another people, the Uttara-Madras, who themselves get connected with the Kambojas, as a Kamboja Aupamanyava is described as a pupil of Madragāra.<sup>17</sup> There is the further interesting detail in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>18</sup> of a dispute between the Kuru-Pāñchāla Brahmins and of the Northern Brahmins in which the latter got the better of it. These Northern Brahmins are described as having speech similar to that of the Kuru-Pāñchālas. Their speech was regarded as celebrated for purity, and the Brahmins are described as going to the north for purposes of study. This is confirmed by the Buddhist tradition that Gandhāra was famous as a University centre to which even such an exalted personage as Prasēnajit of Kosala, the contemporary of Buddha, went for education as a prince.<sup>19</sup> It might also be noted here that the Mahāvamsa refers to the region of the Uttarakuru as one to which some priests were directed to fetch a stone for working the relic chamber of the Great Stūpa.<sup>20</sup> We would not therefore perhaps be far wrong if we located this Uttarakuru somewhere in the Tarim Basin in what is known as Chinese Turkistan, so that they would be on the frontiers of China and India and in touch with the Hiung-Nu.

Hiuen-Tsang's reference to the 'Rats' in the City west of Khotan.

That this is the identical location of the Hiung-Nu in the earlier periods of their history, as known to the Chinese, is in evidence in the account of Khotan in the Chinese Traveller Hiuen-Tsang's travels. He says there "in old days, a general of the Hiung-Nu came to ravage the borders of this country with several tens of myriads of followers." A body of rats of extraordinary size, who had their habitat not far from Khotan are, according to the story, said to have miraculously overthrown the Hiung-Nu.<sup>21</sup>

It is also noteworthy that to reach this, the traveller had to cross the river Sita, which must be the Paurāṇic Sita, one of the seven holy rivers that took their rise round Mēru or Sumēru, the Paurāṇic centre of the earth. It is this river that again seems to be referred to by the classical writers generally by the term 'Silas.'<sup>22</sup> It seems now clear that the land of the Uttarakuru was in the valley of the Tarim in the north-western margin of what is now known to Central Asian travellers as the Takla Makan desert on the eastern slopes of the out-spurs of the Tianshan Mountains. A mere glance at a map of Asia will show clearly that in the days of the Hiung-Nu—Hun ascendancy that must have formed the road of communication between China and India, from the middle of the first century B.C. onwards. If the Chinese knew the Hiung-Nu in this locality, it is just possible that the Indians might have heard of them in the same region, and as such it would be untenable to draw, from the occurrence of any reference to the Hūna, the inference that it is necessarily made to the Ephthalite Huns.

Conclusion.

The Huns may no longer exist, perhaps as a people, but the Hun is not yet dead, and if according to what Professor Maitland said in one of his addresses that history is lengthening both forwards and backwards, here is an illustration of the backward extension of the Hun history. In the days of his dominance, the Hun was universally regarded as the destroyer of civilization and his activities in this evil work were experienced alike all along the frontiers of civilization beginning from the walls of China along the Tarim basin down to the sources of the river Oxus, and along the river Oxus itself to the Caspian Sea, and across the southern coast of Russia through the whole length of the Roman frontier extending from the mouth of the Danube to the lower Rhine, if not to the mouths of the Rhine. It is to the good fortune of humanity that the principles of civilisation triumphed ultimately all along this frontier.

DEKKAN OF THE ŚĀTAVĀHANA PERIOD.

BY PROF. D. R. BHANDARKAR, M.A.; CALCUTTA.

Religious, Social and Economic History.

IN the preceding chapter I have given the political history of the Dekkan during the Śātavāhana period. The inscriptions, which throw light on this history, throw light also on the religious, social, and economic condition of Mahārāshṭra. Let us first see what they tell us about the religious condition. Of course, Buddhism was in an exceedingly flourishing state. Almost all the early caves so far found in the Dekkan are dedicated to Buddhism, and, what is strange, were excavated during the Śātavāhana period. They were of two kinds, one called Chaitya-grihas or temples, and the other Layanas or residential quarters for Bhikshus or Buddhist mendicants. The first are with vaulted roofs and horse-shoe shaped windows over the entrance, and have interiors consisting of a nave and side aisles with a small stūpa at the inner circular end. They are thus remarkably similar to Christian basilicas, and were most probably their prototypes. The second class consists of a hall surrounded by a number of cells, each cell containing as a rule a stone bench for the monk to sleep upon. Each Layana cave had one or two rock-cut cisterns attached to it. Different parts of all these caves, whether Chaitya-grihas or Layanas, were caused to be excavated, i.e. the expense of cutting them in solid rock was borne, by all sorts and conditions of men, showing what hold Buddhism had over the popular mind. They not only incurred the cost of excavating these caves or any parts thereof but made ample provisions for their repairs and for the maintenance of the Bhikshus who resided there. For repairs villages were generally granted. For feeding the Bhikshus pieces of land and sometimes villages also were given. It was also a custom in the Dekkan at any rate to supply them with new robes (chivara) and a coin to boot. Provision for these items was generally made by investing large sums of money in a neighbouring guild, the annual interest on which was used for that purpose. The Bhikshus occupied the caves during the rainy season only, the remainder of the year being spent by them on religious tours just as Jaina sādhus do to the present day. It appears that certain caves were reserved for certain sects of the Buddhist monks. Thus Cave No. 3 at Nāsik, as we have seen, was assigned to the Bhadrāyanīyas by Gautamīputra Śātakarṣi's mother. The cave at Kārle belonged to the Mahāsaṃghikas, and at least one cave at Junnar to the Dharmottariya sect. The caves at Kārle and Junnar are situated in the passes leading from the Konkan to the Ghāts. It appears that the Buddhist mendicants were travelling freely from the Konkan to the Ghāts and from the Ghāts to the Konkan. Nay, they seem to have travelled by sea also. This explains why we have caves at Chiplun, Mahād and Kudā situated on the creeks.

Brahmanism also was in an equally flourishing condition. We have seen that Śātakarṣi I. and his queen performed a number of sacrifices the description of which has been partly preserved in the mutilated inscription at Nānāghāt.<sup>1</sup> They seem to have celebrated no less than twenty sacrifices. Aśvamedha was twice performed; so also Gavāmayana. Some of the other sacrifices were Agnyādheya, Rājāsūya, Aptoryāma and so forth. The dakṣiṇā or sacrificial fee consisted of villages, kārshāpanas, ordinary and milch cows, elephants and horses, horse-chariots, silver pots, silver ornaments, dresses and so on. The highest number of cows given is 11,000 and of kārshāpaṇas 24,400. This was certainly Brahmanism of a most vigorous type. The same Nānāghaṭ inscription that gives an account of these sacrifices begins with adoration to Dharma, Indra, Saṁkarshaṇa and Vāsudeva, the sun and the moon, and the four guardians of the quarters—Yama, Varuṇa, Kubera and Vāsava. The names of Saṁkarshaṇa and Vāsudeva prove the early prevalence of the worship of Kṛishṇa and his family in the Dekkan. The obeisance to Indra also suggests that worship of that god survived almost to the beginning of the first century A.D. This is also corroborated by the fact that according to the practice of borrowing names of gods we find Indradeva to be the name of a private individual in a Nāsik cave inscription. We similarly meet with the name Dharmadeva, agreeing with the Nānāghaṭ inscription in showing that there was at the time a god of the name Dharma who was worshipped. Who this god exactly was is, however, not clear. Other names of lay-donors specified in cave inscriptions which bear witness to the survival of the worship of some of the Vedic gods up to this late period are, besides Indradeva referred to above, (1) Mitradeva, (2) Agnimitra and (3) Indrāgnidatta. The names Gopāla, Viṣṇudatta and Viṣṇupālita furnish evidence for the development of Vaishnavism, and confirm the inference already drawn from the Nānāghaṭ record. Worship of Siva appears, however, to be far more prevalent in the Dekkan if we may take names as our evidence. Names such as Bhūtapāla, Mahādevanaka, Sivadatta, Sivaghosha, Sivapālita, Sivabhūti, Sivadāta, Bhavagopa and so forth clearly show that this god was popularly worshipped under four names, viz., Siva, Mahādeva, Bhava and Bhūtapāla. That his vehicle, the bull, was also adored may be seen from the names, Nandin, Rishabhagaka and Rishabhadatta. The names Skandapālita, Sivaskandila and Sivaskandagupta show that the god Skanda was worshipped both separately and conjointly with Siva. Such names again as Nāga, Sarpa and Sarpila point to the prevalence of serpent worship.

What is perhaps the most important feature of the religious condition of this period is that we find many foreigners embracing either Buddhism or Brahmanism. I have already told you that during this period India was infested with such alien tribes as the Yavanas, Sakas, Pahlavas and Ābhiras. We have incontestable epigraphic evidence to show that they not only embraced either Buddhism or Brahmanism but also adopted Hindu names. In cave inscriptions we find Yavanas frequently mentioned as making gifts in connection with Chaityagrihas or monastic residences. Thus at Kārlē we have two Yavanas, one named Sihadhaya (Simbadhvaja) and the other Dharma. At Junnar we find mention of three called Irila, Chiṭa (Chitra), and Chandra. At Nāsik the name of only one Yavana is specified, viz., Indrāgnidatta, son of Dharmadeva. It will be seen that these Yavanas had turned Buddhist lay-men and that all of them except perhaps one had assumed Hindu names. The same was the case with the Sakas. I have in one of my previous lectures spoken to you about Ushavadāta. This name is only a Prakṛit form of the Sanskrit Rishabhadatta or Vṛishabhadatta. His wife's name, we have seen, is Saṅghamitā, i.e., Saṅghamitrā. Both these are indisputably Hindu names. But in an inscription at Nāsik we are distinctly told that he was a Saka. His foreign origin is also indicated by the names of his father and father-in-law. The former is called Dīnka and the latter Nahapāna, both decidedly un-Indian names. Nahapāna, again, is styled a Kshatrapa, and is said to be of the Kshaharāta family. Kshaharāta is a non-Hindu name, and Ksha'trapa, we know, is the Indian abbreviated form of the old Persian title Kshatrapāvan, corresponding to the Greek Satrap. All these things unmistakably point to the alien origin of Ushavadāta, and, in particular, to his having been a Saka, though his and his wife's names are distinctly Hindu. Now let us see what the inscriptions, above all Nāsik inscription No. 10, tell us about him. Ushavadāta is called tri-go-kata-sahasrada or the giver of three hundred thousand kine. He is further spoken of as having granted sixteen villages to the gods and Brāhmaṇs. He is also stated to have furnished eight Brāhmaṇs with the means of marriage at the holy place Prabhāsa, i.e. Somnāth-Paṭṭan in Kāñhiāwār; in other words, he incurred the merit of accomplishing eight Brāhmaṇ marriages. And, to crown the whole, he is said to have annually fed one hundred thousand Brāhmaṇs. This reminds us, as Sir Ramkrishna Bhandarkar has aptly said, of the grand feast given, not many years ago, to Brāhmaṇs by the father of the present Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior. These charities undoubtedly stamp Ushavadāta as a very staunch adherent of the Brahmanical religion. Yet in origin he was a Saka, and, therefore, a foreigner. There are many other instances of Sakas and Ābhīras having turned either Buddhists or adopted Hindu names.<sup>2</sup>

Another feature of the period is the catholic spirit of religion. We have seen what a firm follower of Brahmanism Ushavadāta was. But he was by no means a bigot, and we find him excavating a cave for Buddhist monks at Nāsik and granting a village for the maintenance of the Bhikshus settled in the monastic establishment at Kārle. Such was also the case with the Śātavāhana king Śātakarṇi, his mother Gautamī, and his son Puṣumāvi. We know they were Brahmanists, and yet their charities were not confined to their faith but extended freely also to Buddhism. I have mentioned above that Gautamī caused one cave to be cut near Nāsik, and presented it to the Bhadrāyanīyas. For the maintenance of the monks and repairs to the cave, Śātakarṇi and Puṣumāvi granted a piece of land and a village respectively. They similarly gave a village to the Buddhist establishment at Kārle. A third noteworthy feature of the religious condition of this period is that the espousal of a different religion did not entail the loss of caste. Perhaps the most typical case is that of a Brāhmaṇ called Ayitilu, whose wife Bhāyilā makes the benefaction of a Chaitya-griha to the Buddhist community settled in the Kudā caves.<sup>3</sup> That her husband Ayitilu was a Buddhist is certain, because he has actually been called an upāsaka. And though he was thus a Buddhist, he had not lost his caste, because he still called himself a Brāhmaṇ. The truth of the matter is that Buddhism was a revolt not so much against caste distinction as against the sacrificial system and the authority of the Vedas to dictate the path of salvation. Buddhism left its followers to perform their domestic ceremonies entirely according to the Vedic ritual, just as Jainism did up till twenty-five years ago.

A glimpse into the constitution of the Hindu society in the Dekkan at this period is afforded by the status or caste names not unfrequently specified of the donors mentioned in Cave inscriptions. Those of the highest rank among these were of course the Mahārāṭhis

(Mahārāshtrikas), Mahābhojas and Mahāsenāpatīs.<sup>4</sup> They seem to have occupied the position of the feudatory chieftains. The Mahābhojas seem to have held the present Thāpā and Kolābā districts of the Bombay Presidency as is clearly seen from the Kudā and Kaṣherī cave inscriptions, and the Mahārāṣṭhis the Poona and neighbouring districts as is attested by the Bhājā, Berjā, and Kārle epigraphs. One dynastic name from among the Mahābhojas was Maṇḍava.<sup>5</sup> Of the Mahārāṣṭhis two families are known—one called Okhālākīya and the other Aigīya.<sup>6</sup> Next in rank come the officers such as Amātya or Rājāmātya, Mahāmātras, Bhāṇḍāgārikas. The former two correspond to the modern Subahs or district collectors and the third to the treasurer. Of the same social status are Naigama, Sārthavāha and Śreṣṭhīn. Naigama apparently is an ordinary merchant, and Sārthavāha the leader of a caravan of traders. Śreṣṭhīn, of course, denotes the head of a guild or of the board of trade. The latter two, again, correspond to the aldermen, and took an important part in the administration of the town corporate. Descending lower in the social scale we have Lekhaka (scribe), Vaidya (physician), Hālākīya (cultivator), Suvarṇakāra or Hāiranyika (goldsmith), and Gāndhika (druggist). To the lowest class have to be assigned Vardhaki (carpenter), Mālākara (gardener), Lohavāṇija (blacksmith) and Dāsaka (fisherman). One curious social feature of this period is represented by the terms Gṛīhapati or Kuṣumbin which as a rule are found applied to the mercantile and cultivating classes.<sup>7</sup> Sometimes they are used alone and without the specification of any caste name. It seems that the middle class, which consisted chiefly of cultivators and mercantile people, was split up into a number of gṛīhas, i.e. homesteads, or kuṣumbas or kulas, i.e. families, the head of each one of which was considered to be so important a personage as to require to be designated Gṛīhapati or Kuṣumbin. In later times, however, the first term was entirely forgotten, and the second was employed exclusively to denote the cultivators,<sup>8</sup> and is no doubt traceable in the Marāṭhī word kuṣmbi and the Gujarāṭī kaṣṭi. One

<sup>4</sup> If we separate the honorific suffix mahā, Rājhi and Bhoja can easily be recognised to be the same as Rāṣṭhika and Bhoja of the Aśoka Rock Edicts V and XIII respectively. But what is the meaning of the term petanika which is associated with them both in the Aśoka inscriptions? I should like in this connection to draw the attention of the scholars to a passage from the Āṅguttara-Nikāya (III, 76 & 300), which runs as follows: Yassa kassaci Mahānāma kulaputtassa paścha dhammā samvijanti, . . . yadi vā rāṣṭhikassa pettanikassa yadi vā senāya senāpatikassa, etc., etc. We have here a list of rulers from the king downwards. The ruler of the second rank is pettanika Rāṣṭhika. What is worthy of note is that Rāṣṭhika is here called pettanika, and it seems that even in Aśoka's Rock Edict V, Rāṣṭhikas are meant to be styled petanikas, and that the two terms in that Edict ought not to be separated as has been done by scholars. Now, pettanika of the Āṅguttara-Nikāya passage has been explained by the commentator once as pitarā cattaṃ adpateyaṃ bhuṇjati (=one who enjoys property given by father) and in another place as bhūti-ānubhūtaṃ bhuṇjati. It appears that these Rāṣṭhikas (=Rāshtrikas) were originally governors of Rāshtras or provinces who afterwards made themselves more or less independent and became their hereditary rulers. Similar was the case with Bhojas, who too are called pitinikas in Rock Edict XIII. A Nāsik cave inscription (EI., VIII, 94) speaks of a Mahāsenāpati and his wife Mahāsenāpatinī exactly as other cave inscriptions speak of Mahārāṣṭhi and Mahārāṣṭhinī or Mahābhoja and Mahābhojinī. As Senāpati is mentioned as a class of rulers in the passage of the Āṅguttara-Nikāya quoted above, the Mahāsenāpati of the Nāsik inscription also must be taken to denote a ruler like Mahārāṣṭhi or Mahābhoja. Senāpatīs were originally generals who afterwards made themselves independent or semi-independent rulers.

noteworthy custom of this period is for a male individual of the Kshatriya class to specify his metronymic along with his proper name. In North India the practice was to form the metronymic from the name of the country over which his mother's father ruled. Thus Ajātaśatru of Rājagṛha, who was a contemporary of Buddha, styles himself Vaidehīputra, i.e. son of the daughter of the Videha prince or Chief. But curiously enough, in South India the custom seems to be to adopt the metronymic not from the name of a country but from that of a Brāhmaṇa gotra. Accordingly we have got such metronymics as Gautamī, Vāsishṭhī, Māḍharī, Kautsī, Kadēkī, etc., all derived from Brāhmaṇa gotras. It is not reasonable to argue from these that these rulers were Brāhmaṇas. It is not possible that they all could be Brāhmaṇas, because in an inscription on the Jaggayyapeṭa Stūpa in the Kistnā district we read of a prince Virapurushadatta who styles himself Māḍharīputra, but he belonged to the Ikshvāku family, and was, therefore, a Kshatriya and not a Brāhmaṇa. Bühler, therefore, seems to be right in supposing that these metronymics were framed from the name of the gotra of the spiritual preceptor of the Kshatriya family to which the mother originally belonged.

One other curious fact may also be noticed. We know how Gautamīputra Śātakarni and Mahākshatrapa Rudradāman were related to each other. A son of the former was son-in-law of the latter. Rudradāman was a Saka and was of foreign extraction. The matrimonial alliance between his and the Śātavāhana family is, therefore, all the more curious and reminds us of the marriage of Chandragupta, founder of the Maurya dynasty, with the daughter of the Greek king Antiochus Nicator.

I shall now touch on the economic condition of Mahārāshṭra prevalent during the Āndhrabhṛitya period. Let us first turn our attention to the currency of the province. We have already seen that at the end of Nāsik Inscription 12, Ushavadāta speaks of his having given away 70,000 kārshāpaṇas to gods and Brāhmaṇas. There we have been distinctly told that these 70,000 kārshāpaṇas were in value equivalent to 2,000 suvarṇas, thirty-five of the former class of money making one of the latter. Kārshāpaṇa was a type of coinage indigenous to India, and we had both copper and silver kārshāpaṇas. Here, of course, silver kārshāpaṇas are intended. Again, the reference to the Suvarṇa coins, as Prof. Rapson rightly says, must surely be to the contemporary gold currency of the Kushanas.<sup>9</sup> We have already seen that Ushavadāta's father-in-law, Nahapāna, was a Kshatrapa not only of Kujula Kadphises but also of Wema Kadphises, who was the first Kushana sovereign to introduce gold coinage. No foreign ruler, either the Indo-Bactrian, or the Indo-Scythian, seems to have struck it before him. Wema Kadphises' gold coinage must therefore be supposed to have been current in Nahapāna's kingdom. The rate of exchange between the indigenous silver kārshāpaṇas and the new foreign gold Suvarṇas was thus 35:1. But there was also another class of silver money, I mean that introduced by Nahapāna himself and called Kuśana. In the last chapter I have mentioned that on mount Trirāgmī near Nāsik Ushavadāta excavated a cave which accommodated twenty monks, and that each was to be given a Kuśana for every one of the four months of the rainy season. Evidently, therefore, eighty Kuśanas were needed every year. These were to accrue from the annual interest on the sum of 1,000 kārshāpaṇas deposited by Ushavadāta in a neighbouring guild. And this annual interest, we have been told, amounted to 90 kārshāpaṇas. We thus see that 80 Kuśanas were equivalent to 90 kārshāpaṇas, or in other words, the rate of exchange between these two classes of coins was 9:8.

A unique feature of the economic condition of this period is the institution of Śreṇi or craft-guild. At Govardhana near the Nāsiḥ or Triraśmi caves there were no less than four different descriptions of guilds, viz., tilapiśhaka or oil-millers' guild, odayantrika or guilds of artisans fabricating hydraulic engines, kularika or potters' (?) guild, and kolika-nikāya or weavers' guild of which there were two. In the town near the Junnar caves there were at least three guilds, one of dhamnikas or corn-dealers, the second of vaṇsakaras or bamboo-workers and the third of kāśkārās or braziers. There must have been many more guilds not only in Govardhana or near Junnar but also at other district towns about which no mention has been made. The Jātakas or Birth-Stories of Buddha, which portray social life of the sixth century B.C., make mention of several such guilds. The conclusion is plain that both North and South India was studded with guilds from the sixth century B.C. to the third century A.D. Now the prevalence of these craft-guilds shows that institutions of self-government were by no means uncommon in India. Secondly, in Europe a craft-guild comprised all the artisans in a single branch of industry in a particular town. This does not seem to be the case with those in India, at any rate in the Dekkan. We have seen that at Govardhana there were not one but two guilds of weavers. Thirdly, Śreṇis of India were not simply trade guilds but were also something like modern banks, because anybody could invest any sums here and receive interest on them. Fourthly, any sum deposited in such guilds was called atshaya nīti or perpetual endowment. We have seen that Ushavadāta made two such permanent endowments—one for providing for new robes to the monks residing in his cave and the other for making money payments to them. We have also seen that Ushavadāta was a personage of high rank. He was the son-in-law of the Kshatrapa Nahapāna ruling over Rājputānā, Central India, Kāśhīwār, Gujarāt and the Dekkan. If he occupied such a high status, could he not have arranged for the robing and money payment of his monks from the local district treasury? Why, then, had he to make two investments in two different guilds? The reply most probably is that empires were looked upon as of short duration, but guilds as lasting institutions. An empire may be established and destroyed in no time, but a guild lived from age to age. This must have been the experience of the people, and this alone can explain why Ushavadāta deposited sums in the two guilds. Fifthly, we have seen what the rate of interest was. One guild paid at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum and the other 9 per cent. Sixthly, it is worthy of note that money was deposited in these guilds in indigenous coin, i.e. in kārshāpāna, and not in Kuśāna or Suvarṇa which were both moneys introduced by foreign dynasties. Seventhly, it was not enough to deposit a sum in a guild, if it was to be a permanent endowment. The procedure did not end there, for what guarantee was there that interest on that sum would be paid by the guild from generation to generation after the death of the depositor? We know from Nāsiḥ Inscription No. 12 that Ushavadāta after investing his sums in the two guilds of Govardhana, had his charities proclaimed in the town assembly (nigama-sabhā) and registered at the record office. It appears in ancient times each such town had its local self-government which was like a trade-guild looked upon as a permanent institution, and could insist upon the latter carrying out from generation to generation the original intention of a donor provided the exact nature of his benefaction was recorded in the town archives.

Again, there seems to have been frequent and pretty smooth communication between the different parts not only of the Dekkan but of India. Thus we have the benefaction of persons residing at Sopārā recorded in the caves at Kārle, of those of Kalyāṇ at Kanheri or Junnar, of Nāsik at Beḍṣā, and so forth. This clearly shows that the communications were perfect all over the Dekkan. But this is not all. We have got gifts of the natives of Bharukachha or Broach mentioned in caves at Junnar, of Vaijayanti or Banavasi (?) at Kārle, of Dāttāmitrī in Lower Sind at Nāsik, and of Karahākaḍa or Karhād and Nāsik at the Bharaut Stūpa between Jubbulpore and Allāhābad. Unless the roads were at least tolerably good and not infested by robbers and thieves, it is not possible that inhabitants of one part of the country could go to a distant one and make benefactions.

Foreign commerce and trade were flourishing, and Dekkan took no insignificant part in the commercial relations of India with the West. An account of it is contained in the Periplus of the Erythrean Sea, which describes the Egyptian trade with East Africa and India. Ships from the Western countries sailed down the Red Sea and followed the Arabian Coast as far as Kane, from where the route to India diverted, some ships sailing to the Indus and on to Barygaza (Broach) and others direct to the ports of Limyrike (Malabar Coast). In these voyages, the ships made use of the monsoon, starting from Egypt in July. From Barygaza the coast immediately adjoining stretched from the north directly to the south, and the country is, therefore, called Dakṣiṇabades (Dakṣiṇāpatha). Among the marts in the inland part of this South Country, there were two of particular importance—Paithana, which lay south from Barygaza, a distance of twenty days, and Tagara, ten days east of Paithana, the greatest city in the country.<sup>10</sup> Paithana is, of course, the modern Paīḥan, and Tagara has been identified with Ter in the Naldurg District, Nizam's Dominions.<sup>11</sup> From Paīḥan was carried down to Barygaza a great quantity of onyx-stone, and from Tagara ordinary cottons in abundance, many sorts of muslins, mallow-coloured cottons, and other articles of local production brought into it from the east coast. The harbours along the coast south of Barygaza were Souppara (Sopārā) and Kalliena (Kalyān near Bombay). In regard to the last port we are informed that it was raised to the rank of a regular mart in the time of the elder Sarganes, but after Sandanes became its master its trade was put under the severest restrictions; for if Greek vessels, even by accident, entered its port, a guard was put on board and they were taken to Barygaza. The elder Sarganes is most likely Śātakarṇi, the third king of the Śātavāhana dynasty, and he seems to have made Kalyān a commercial centre connected with the inland emporia Paīḥan and Tagara. When the Śakas, however, seized the north part of the Dekkan, every endeavour was made to divert the trade through their dominions from Broach direct to Paīḥan and Tagara, with the result that Kalyān speedily lost all its importance and is not mentioned at all by Ptolemy who wrote only six decades after the author of the Periplus. As the communication from Broach to Paīḥan and Tagara was of recent origin, it is no wonder that the commodities were carried "along roads of extreme difficulty" as we no doubt learn from the Periplus. Who Sandanes was is not clear, but it is not unlikely that he was the officer of the Sopara District under Nahapana. The other sea-ports of commercial importance farther south were Semulla, Mandagora, Palaipatmai, Melizeigara and Buzantion. Semulla has rightly been recognised to be Chaul of the Kolaba district and 23 miles south of Bombay. Mandagora is taken to be Mandangād to the south of the Bāṅkoṭ Creek and Palaipatmai with Palnear Mahād. Personally I think Palaipatmai corresponds to Va(Ba)lipattana mentioned as a sea-port in the Silāhāra inscriptions.<sup>12</sup> Melizeigara, according to some, is Jaygād, and, according to others, Janjirā. Buzantion no doubt corresponds to Vaijayanti; but with what place the latter is to be identified is far from clear. Some place it near Chipḷūṇ, and some near Banavāsi. The last identification is less probable, because it is far too south. Banavāsi, again, is in the interior and not on the sea-coast.

ANCIENT HINDU CORONATION AND ALLIED CEREMONIALS.

Rājyabhisheka.

THE Vedic work from which the rites of coronation derived their sanction is not the Atharva-Veda alone, as will be apparent from the statement of the Nītimayūkha,<sup>1</sup> which gives details of the ceremony, "according to the Gopatha-Brāhmaṇa of the Atharva-Veda, as also those not dependent on its authority." The existence of the coronation can be traced much earlier than the Gopatha-Brāhmaṇa. The Taittirīya-Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> gives its details as an independent performance in three sections which are separate from those devoted to the rājasiṃha. Wilson and Goldstücker observe that "the rites of the Abhisheka which is not part of a rājasiṃha sacrifice, but a ceremony performed at a king's accession to the throne, are similar to, but not identical with, those of the Punarabhisheka; they are founded on the proceedings which took place when Indra was consecrated by the gods as their supreme ruler, and which forms the subject of the 38th chapter of the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa."<sup>3</sup> If the Taittirīya-Brāhmaṇa be older than the Aitareya, as Prof. Macdonell suggests,<sup>4</sup> then the similarity between the abhisheka and the punarabhisheka cannot be taken as indicative of the derivation of the one from the other. Abhisheka appears therefore to have been an independent ceremony existing side by side with the rājasiṃha.

The abhisheka as detailed in the Taittirīya-Brāhmaṇa begins with seven mantras to be uttered by the priest for performing a homa before the ritual of sprinkling takes place. The first mantra speaks of the prince's rebirth as the son of the pitṛiks (sacrificial priests), with his vigour immensely increased by his symbolic entrance into the homa fire and exit therefrom, and wishes him capability to keep his subjects from sinful ways. The second wishes him an extended kingdom, a stout physique for its efficient administration, and a good supply of cattle for the performance of the sacrifices. The third wishes him to be the guide of men, and wants him to solemnly say that he would protect the good and punish the wicked. The fourth and fifth invoke blessing on him for prosperity, while the sixth and seventh for the glorification of the castes by his power, the prosperity of his subjects, and the extension of Prajāpati's protection to him.

In these mantras, two points are note-worthy: (1) The belief of the prince's rebirth as the son of the sacrificial priests; which appears akin to the rebirth of the twice-born by the upanayana sacrament for their initiation into the study of the Vedas. The prince, as it were, becomes a totally different being with his faculties and physical vigour renewed and increased for the discharge of the new duties that the assumption of kingly office will devolve upon him. Such a belief perhaps made the performance of the coronation ceremony an imperative necessity to every prince; for, otherwise, in the estimation of the people, the prince will stand bare of the "kingly fitness" which he omits to formally bestow upon himself by the ceremonial, and for which no natural capabilities of the prince, however great, could perhaps be an adequate substitute. After the death of a king or after his retirement, some time must have elapsed before the coronation rituals could be performed by his successor; and hence, the question naturally suggests itself whether the latter could exercise the rights and duties of a full-fledged king immediately after the end of the previous régime without formally going through the ceremony. In the case of the initiation sacrament, the uninitiated boy had no right to the acquisition of sacred lore before he went through the necessary rite; but not so perhaps in the case of the coronation ceremony, as will appear from evidences later on. (2) The solemn assertion by the prince, which looks very much like the coronation oath, to protect the good and punish the wicked, that is to say, the paramount duties of the protection of life and property of his subjects and an impartial administration of justice.

<sup>1</sup> Nītimayūkha by Nilakaṇṭha Bhaṭṭa (MS. in ASB, No. II, A. 25), p. 3. The discourse on coronation in the Bhāṭṭa-rahasya (in Bengali) by Rāmadāsa Sena cites a short passage from the Gopatha-Brāhmaṇa without any reference to its location in the Brāhmaṇa. I could not trace it either in the Bibliotheca Indica, or the Bombay edition of the work. I do not understand why, unless the passage has eluded my search, it should be omitted in the editions.

<sup>2</sup> Taittirīya-Brāhmaṇa, II, 7, 15-17. Rig-Veda, X, 173-174, refer to rituals for steadying the king in his office by the propitiation of certain deities. It is not clear whether they have any connection with the coronation, if any, prevailing at that time.

After the performance of the homa, a tiger-skin is spread with the mantra "Thou art the sky, thou art the earth," and the prince is seated thereon. The priests bless him saying, "May you be unconquerable, may the various quarters protect you, may your subjects be loyal, and may the kingdom never slip away from your rule," and sprinkle him with water in which barley and dūrvā grass have been steeped, the ritual being accompanied with blessings.

The prince is then asked to repair to and ascend a chariot standing before the āhavanīya fire of the sacrificial ground where the ceremony is taking place, appropriate benedictory formulas (some of which are repetitions of those used in the sprinkling ceremony) being uttered during the time. The object of this ascension of the car appears from the last formula addressed to the chariot to be a symbolic expression of the desire that the prince might achieve success in his rule. The king next prays the royal priest to help him by a faithful discharge of his duties that serve to keep the realm free from danger, and contribute to its well-being. He then asks the charioteer to sit on the car and hold the reins. The king then recites to the effect, "May I never hear within my dominion the sound of bows of my enemies coveting my kingdom, may that harsh sound change into a sweet one by making the hostile army friendly."

The brāhmaṇas as well as the king's friends and relations embrace him, after which his body is smeared with unguents. At this time, the king has to look towards the sun, and the royal priest addresses him thus: "May this king be lustrous like the noon-day sun; may my blessings be likewise powerful in their effects; may you (king),—glorious sun, attain prosperity by my blessings; may my words be in a special degree discriminatory of right and wrong; may my blessings be firm in their efficacy; may the rivers (in the kingdom) be full, clouds rain in time, and crops fructify; may the king be the lord of a rich country veritably flowing with milk and honey."

After oblations to the fire intended for the ketins, i.e., Agni, Vāyu and Sūryya, the king is asked to sit on a throne of udumbara wood, when the purohita says, "O king, subdue your enemies completely. Now that I have finished the consecration bearing the two names of Vaśīṣṭi<sup>5</sup> and Ugra<sup>6</sup> pay fees to the purohita. May you attain long life and be freed from Varuṇa's snares.<sup>7</sup> Then the priest shaves the king's head with a mantra, which indicates that it is an imitation of what Prajāpati had done for Soma and Varuṇa. The hair is collected on a tuft of kuśa grass, serving thereby to preserve the king's strength.<sup>8</sup> The king is then anointed with a mixture of milk and ghī with the same object in view with a formula which asks the Aśvins to have the king's beauty devoted entirely to the queens.

The Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata speak of a few coronations of princes, the former those of (1) Sugrīva,<sup>9</sup> (2) Vibhishana,<sup>10</sup> (3) Rāma,<sup>11</sup> (4) Kuśa and Lava,<sup>12</sup> (5) Aṅgada and Chandraketu,<sup>13</sup> (6) Śatrughna's sons Subāhu and Śatrughnāti,<sup>14</sup> and the latter those of (1) Janamejaya,<sup>15</sup> (2) Vichitra-vīrya,<sup>16</sup> (3) Puru,<sup>17</sup> (4) Yudhishthira,<sup>18</sup> (5) Sarabha, son of Śiśupāla,<sup>19</sup> and (6) Parikshit.<sup>20</sup> Full ritualistic details are given nowhere in the epics. The common features of the rituals, so far as we can gather them from their fragmentary descriptions in the first named epic, are collection of waters from seas and rivers in gold pitchers, sprinkling of same on the prince seated on a throne, crowning and prince's gifts to brāhmaṇas, while their distinguishing features are (1) the performance of a homa (in Sugrīva's coronation), (2) presents offered by the subjects to the prince (e.g., in Vibhishana's coronation), (3) presents offered by the prince (as in Rāma's coronation), (4) difference as to persons who sprinkle water, and (5) difference as to those who put the crown on his head.

The Mahābhārata furnishes some details of the ceremony of only one prince, Yudhishthira, who sat on a throne made of gold surrounded by others seated likewise. To begin with, he touched white flowers, auspicious symbols (svastikas), unhusked barley-corns, earth, gold, silver, and jewels. Auspicious articles, such as earth, gold, gems, and other things necessary for the coronation were brought by the subjects, who came there headed by the priest. Jars made of gold, udumbara wood, silver and earth, and full of water as well as flowers, fried rice, kuśa grass, cow's milk, śamī, pippal, and palāśa wood, honey, ghī, ladles of udumbara wood and conches decked with gold, were there for the ceremony. The royal priest, Dhaumya, made an altar sloping north and east and marked with the necessary signs. The prince with his consort Draupadi was then seated upon a firm and effulgent stool called sarvatobhadra<sup>21</sup> covered with tiger-skin, and Dhaumya poured libations of ghī upon fire with appropriate mantras. Kṛishṇa poured water from a sanctified conch upon the prince's head, as also Dhṛitarāshṭra and the subjects. The presents brought by the people were formally accepted by Yudhishthira, who in turn honoured them with presents in profusion and gave a thousand *nishka*s to the brāhmaṇas who uttered benedictions for his welfare.

Most of the features of the coronation as found in the epics have been reproduced in the Agni-Purāṇa<sup>22</sup> which, as usual with the Purāṇas, adds to them new rituals making the whole ceremony much more elaborate. The main divisions of the ceremony may be marked out into (1) Aindri-Śānti on a day previous to that of abhisheka, (2) (On the abhisheka day).

(a) Performance of Homa.

(b) Symbolic bathing (i.e., touching the prince's body with earth brought from various places—mytilikā-snāna).

(c) Sprinkling of water on the prince by ministers.

(d) Sprinkling of liquids by Rig-Vedic and Sāma-Vedic brāhmaṇas, and the royal priest.

(e) Sprinkling of water through a pitcher (perforated with a hundred holes) by the royal priest.

(f) Rites by the Yajur-Vedic and Atharva-Vedic brāhmaṇas.

(g) Seeing auspicious things.

(h) Crowning.

(i) Presentation of officials to the prince.

(j) Payment of fees to brāhmaṇas and coronation feast.

(k) Royal procession through the metropolis.

(l) Return of the procession to the royal palace and gifts to the people.

If the reigning king installs his successor on the throne just before his retirement, he may have the abhisheka performed under his auspices on a day prescribed as appropriate for the purpose. If, however, he dies without performing this ceremony for his successor, the Agni-Purāṇa<sup>22</sup> allows for the latter a provisional abhisheka which can be celebrated irrespective of the auspicious or inauspicious nature of the day on which it is held. The reason for such a provision is obvious: the formal vesting of regal powers in the prince in order to enable him to discharge kingly duties cannot be long postponed; for such postponement may lead to difficulties. The rituals of the ceremony are succinctly mentioned as symbolic bathing of the prince with sesamum and white mustard at which the royal priest and the astrologer officiate, the hailing of the prince with the cry of victory after which he sits on a bhadrāsana, proclaims safety for his subjects and issues order to his officers for releasing prisoners. The coronation whether performed under the supervision of the retiring king, or in the case of his death, after the provisional coronation, has to be held on an auspicious day which is fixed in accordance with recommendations of the texts<sup>23</sup> on the subject.

Details of the aforesaid main divisions are:—Re. (1). The Agni-Purāṇa does not furnish its rituals, which, however, are given in later works like the Nīti-mayūkha,<sup>24</sup> which may be summarised thus: After the formal declaration of the king's intention to perform the Aindri-Śānti, the officiating priests are formally entrusted with these duties:—A vedi (altar) is constructed and upon it a Mahāvedi (great altar) on which three lines are drawn on sand, a cavity made and refilled with sand, Earth bowed to, and fire ignited. A gold, silver or copper pitcher full of water is covered with a piece of cloth and an image of Indra made of gold is placed on two eight-leaved lotuses drawn on the cloth. This is followed by offerings to Indra, five oblations to fire and the seating of the Brahman priest, who with the Hotri next engages in the offering of the following oblations, viz., eight to the four cardinal points, and seventeen to Agni and other deities followed by samṛiddhi, sannati, upastṛiyya, viśvākrāt, Prāyāścittātma, sanisthiti, samāna and saṁirāva-bhāga homas. Then follow offerings to the ten presiding deities of the ten quarters of heavens, and to demons of various descriptions. The Pārṇāhuti comes next and then the throwing of the remnants of homa-fire into holy water. In the concluding rite of śānti for averting evil, the king with his consort, relatives and ministers, is sprinkled by the hotri with water from the śānti pitcher. Then both the king and the queen take bath in water mixed with herbs, wear white dresses and garlands, and smear their bodies with the paste of white sandal. Gifts are made to the priests, and the gold image of Indra after symbolic relinquishment is given to Āchāryya. The whole ceremony is then brought to a close by the feasting of brāhmaṇas.

The object of this ritual is no doubt the welfare of the king implying that of his relatives, officials, and subjects but the central idea in it is the coronation of Indra, the king of the gods. We have seen in connection with the Rājasūya that the mantras for the Punarabhisheka, are uttered in unison with those of the Aindra-mahābhisheka, which goes upon the supposition that the king of the gods was installed on his throne in remote antiquity with the self-same mantras which appear in the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa in connection with the Aindra-mahābhisheka, and which, when uttered at the Punarabhisheka, bring on special well-being of the subject of the Punarabhisheka. In the coronation ceremony with which we are now dealing, much more prominence is given to the idea by devoting a special day with its special rituals to Indra, who is worshipped to make the coronation of the mortal king as much fraught with potentialities for good as his own coronation was in the remote past.

Re. (2). On an auspicious day fixed for abhisheka, the king has to formally declare his intention (saṅkalpa) to perform the abhisheka.

(a) After the ignition of fire<sup>25</sup> and the offering of seventeen oblations as previously mentioned in connection with Aindri-Śānti, the purohita has to perform homa with five sets of Atharva-Vedic mantras, viz. īarma-varma, svastyayana, āyushya, abhayā, and aparājitā, which are intended to secure for the king welfare for himself personally and his kingdom. On the southern side of the homa-fire is kept a gold pitcher (sampātavan kalasa) in which are deposited the residues of offerings. Brāhmaṇas learned in the Vedas as well as brāhmaṇa, Kshatriya, Vaiśya and Sūdra ministers are honoured with presents and seated at the place where the ceremony is to take place. The royal priest, who has to fast on that day, puts on garland and turban and enters into the bathing-house where he has to put nine gold pitchers with waters from various places of pilgrimage as well as an earthen pitcher with water, a gold pitcher with ghṛi, a silver pitcher with milk, copper pitcher with curd, and an earthen pitcher with water in which kuśa grass has been soaked. A gold pitcher with a hundred perforations as also an earthen pitcher filled with water from well and the four seas are also to be there.

<sup>25</sup> Certain characteristics of the flame of this fire, such as brightness like melted gold, resemblance to svastika mark, &c., were regarded as portents for good or evil.

(b) The prince is then bathed symbolically with various descriptions of soil. This bathing consists in touching his head with soil from the top of a hill, ears with that from the top of an anthill, face with that from a temple of Viṣṇu, neck with that from a temple of Indra, chest with that from a royal palace, right arm with that dug up by an elephant by its tusks, left arm with that dug up by a bull by its horns, back with that from a lake, belly with that from a confluence of rivers, sides with that from the banks of a river, waist with that from the door of a brothel,<sup>26</sup> thighs with that from a sacrificial ground, knees with that from a cowshed, shanks with that from a horse-stable, and feet with that from the wheel of a chariot. This ceremony is concluded by the final ablution of his head with pañcagavya (a mixture of milk, curd, clarified butter, and cow's urine and dung).

(c) Four vessels made of gold, silver, copper and earth are filled respectively with clarified butter, milk, curd and water. The Brāhmaṇa, Kṣhattriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra ministers take the gold, silver, copper and earthen vessels in succession and sprinkle their contents on the prince's head from the east, south, west and north respectively.

(d) After the ministers, a R̥g-Vedic brāhmaṇa sprinkles honey and a Sāma-Vedic brāhmaṇa water (in which kuśa grass has been immersed) upon the prince's head. The royal priest commits the sacrificial fire to the care of the sadasyas (assistants) and sprinkles from the aforesaid sampātaraṇ pitcher with the mantras<sup>27</sup> that were uttered in connection with anointment forming part of the abhishechantya of the Rājasūya.

(e) The prince is then taken to the base of the altar and seated upon a bhadrāsana. The royal priest sprinkles water on his head through a gold jar perforated with a hundred holes, uttering "yā ośadhibi, &c."<sup>28</sup> as also perfumed liquids, and water in which flowers, seeds, gems and kuśa grass have been dipped, with the recitation of other formulas.<sup>29</sup>

(g) Auspicious things such as jar filled with water, chowry, fan, mirror, clarified butter, and jar filled with water and herbs are brought before the prince, music is played, (eulogistic songs are sung by the bards, and Vedic psalms chanted by the brāhmaṇas).<sup>32</sup>

(i) "Ośadhiyāḥ pratigrihṇāṣṭa pushpavatī, &c." Vājasaneyi Samhitā, XI, 48.

(ii) "Āśuḥ śiśūno, &c." R̥g-Veda, X, 103, 1.

(A) The royal priest, in the meantime, makes offerings of milk and honey to the divinities and sits on a chair covered with a tiger's skin. So seated he binds the prince's head with a fillet and puts on it the crown with the formulas "Dhruvadyaib, &c.," an English rendering of which is given below :—

"Firm is the heaven, firm is the earth, firm are these mountains, firm is this entire world, so may this king of men be firm."

"May the royal Varuṇa, the divine Brihaspati, may Indra and Agni ever give stability to thy kingdom."

"With a constant oblation we handle the constant Soma; therefore may Indra render thy subject people payers of (their) taxes."<sup>33</sup>

The throne-seat,<sup>34</sup> on which the prince is next seated, is covered with the skins of five animals, bull, cat, wolf, lion and tiger. A symbolic meaning, not given in the texts, was no doubt attached to the spreading of these skins one over another. The tiger skin, as has been seen in connection with a previous ritual, indicated kingly power.

(i) The Agni-Purāṇa next speaks of the Pratihāra presenting officials to the king. It is added by the Nāṭimayūkha that distinguished townsmen, merchants and other subjects are also admitted to this honour.

(j, k & l) The king now presents the royal priest and the astrologer with cows, goats, sheep, horses, &c., and honours the other brāhmaṇas with similar gifts and a sumptuous feast.

After going round the sacrificial fire and saluting the Guru and one or two minor rituals, he sits on a sanctified horse but gets down the next moment to sit on the state elephant similarly sanctified and rides through the principal thoroughfares of the metropolis amid a gorgeous procession. After return to his palace, he accepts the presents made by his subjects, whom he receives with honour and entertains to a feast. Presents in return are also made by the king to his subjects.

It will not be out of place to recount succinctly the principal features of the English coronation of the past in order to show the degree of parallelism between it and that of the Hindus. The early English coronation had many features found in those of other European countries in the past, and may, for this reason, be taken for our purposes as a type of the early European coronations generally.<sup>35</sup>

1. The prince attended by a large number of nobles and government officers made a stately progress to the Tower of London where he resided a day or two to dub as Knights of the Bath a number of candidates who had to perform vigil and other rites preparatory to this honour.

2. Amid a solemn and gorgeous procession in which the new Knights of the Bath, nobles, government officers, and clergymen occupied the particular positions allotted to them, the prince under various marks of honour displayed by the citizens rode to Westminster Hall on the day previous to the day of coronation.

3. Next morning, the nobles and others, marshalled according to their respective ranks, accompanied the prince to the adjacent Westminster Abbey, some of the regalia<sup>36</sup> being carried by certain persons having title to this honour.

4. The first rite performed within the Hall was Recognition in which the Archbishop declared to the people assembled there the prince's rightful claim to the throne and asked them, whether they were ready to give their assent thereto. In this rite were laid the traces of development of coronation from an earlier form of election.

5. Next came the First Oblation, the essence of which was the rite in which a "pall of cloth of gold, and an ingot of gold of a pound weight" received by the prince from the Lord High Chamberlain were made over to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who placed them on the altar.

6. In the Proper Service of the Day, prayers were said for blessings upon the prince.

7. At the conclusion of the sermon forming part of the previous rite, the Coronation Oath was administered by the Archbishop. The prince swore to govern the kingdom according to the established laws and usages, administer justice tempered with mercy, and uphold the religion of the land, and the rights and privileges of the members of the church.

8. The Dean of Westminster anointed with oil from the Ampulla, the palms of the prince's hands, his chest, shoulders, arms, and the crown of his head.

9. The next rite consists in investing the prince with vestments, girdle, buskins, sandals, spurs, sword, &c., which were made over to him on this occasion. Two noteworthy features of this function are that the Archbishop (a) while passing the sword to the prince requested him to protect the church, people, widows, orphans, restore things gone to decay and maintain those that were restored; and (b) while delivering to him the Orb with the Cross he uttered the formula "Receive this Orb, and remember that the whole world is subject to the power and empire of God, and that no one can happily reign upon earth, who hath not received his authority from heaven." At the time of Augustus, the Roman emperor, the Orb was regarded as the symbol of universal dominion. The Cross was affixed to it by Constantine the Great, signifying that universal dominion was but possible by faith.<sup>37</sup>

10. The Archbishop assisted by other clergymen put the crown on the head of the prince seated on St. Edward's Chair, saying, "God crown thee with a crown of glory and righteousness, with the honour and virtue of fortitude that (thou) by (our ministry having) a right faith and manifold fruits of good works, thou mayest obtain the crown of an everlasting kingdom, by the gift of Him whose kingdom endureth for ever. Amen."

11. The Sovereign was invested with the Ring of faith, held the Sceptre of kingly power, the Rod of virtue and equity, and the Bible. He then received the Archbishop's Benediction in appropriate words.

12. The Sovereign was conducted to the throne by the Archbishop who was followed by the bishops and great officers of state. After he was seated on the throne, the Archbishop delivered an exhortation and took the Oath of Fealty. This Oath was also taken by the bishops and the premier Duke, Marquis, Earl, Viscount, and Baron, each of them representing himself and the rest of his rank. During the performance of the Homage, medals of gold and silver struck for the occasion were thrown among the people, and if there were any general pardon, it was read publicly by the Lord Chancellor.<sup>39</sup>

13. In the Holy Communion, the Sovereign advanced towards the altar after the commencement of the Communion Service and made an offering of bread and wine. Then a wedge of gold, called a mark, weighing eight ounces, was received by the Archbishop from the Sovereign and laid upon the altar. This constituted the second oblation.

The Sovereign then returned to Westminster Hall attended by the clergy and others marshalled as before.

14. A noticeable feature of the Coronation Feast held in the Westminster Hall was the proclamation of a challenge to the effect that if anyone dared deny the rightful claim of the present Sovereign to the throne, he was a liar and false traitor, and the Champion was there to fight a duel with him to prove the falsity of his assertion. The Champion threw down his gauntlet, which after a short time was taken up by the Herald. Until the completion of the arrangements for the feast, the Sovereign reposed in the Court of Wards. Several tables were placed in the Hall, the royal table being set on a raised platform. Special duties in connection with this feast were allotted to special officers or noblemen: the royal table, for instance, was covered by the sergeant and gentleman of the ewery; the first course of hot meat was served up with the combined assistance of the sergeant of the silver scullery, and two gentlemen-at-arms or two Knights of the Bath, and other dishes were brought with a procession composed of several officers. A full delineation of this coronation being outside the scope of this section, details of this as well as other functions, which may have value for other purposes, have been omitted.

In the evening were held a general illumination, a display of fire-works in Hyde Park, the principal theatres being opened free to the public.

The features common to the two systems of coronation of India and Europe may now be summed up. The commonness is due in some instances to the very nature of the ceremony, and in others, to other causes.

Both the systems are endued with a religious character, difference lying only in the degree. In the one, God, His Son, and the Holy Ghost were solicited by prayers and offerings to bless the Sovereign and secure the welfare of his kingdom, while in the other, the divinities together with various natural and supernatural forces credited with powers for good or evil, were for the same purpose entreated or propitiated through a multiplicity of prayers, offerings and other religious rites.

The coronation of the Hindus, in its later form, lost all traces of its connection with the elective principle pointed out elsewhere<sup>40</sup> to have been operative in the epic period, in which it could be traced in the recognition forming part of the installation ceremony. In the European form of coronation, it was traceable in the formulary of election expunged in later times, as also in particular functions incorporated in the coronations of various European countries pointing to some form of election as their origin, e.g., the practice of elevating a sovereign on a shield among the later Romans, and the custom of having stone circles to serve as seats for electors and a large stone in the centre for the Sovereign.<sup>41</sup>

The practice of taking an Oath to protect the people and perform other regal duties existed in the Hindu coronation, as evidenced by the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, but it disappeared later on. Therefore the similarity of the European and the Indian systems in this respect is not found all along their respective lines of development.

Smearing with unguents in the Indian type may be taken to correspond with anointing in the Western, sprinkling of liquids obtaining greater prominence in the former.

Crowning, blessing for universal dominion, presentation of nobles and officials, jail delivery, stately progress through the metropolis, feast and the devotion of a day or two to a ceremony preliminary to the coronation proper, may also be regarded as points of similarity between the two types.

SECTION II.

Yauvarājyabhisheka.

It is in the epic period that we find the first mention of the ceremony for the inauguration of the crown-prince. Prof. Goldstücker is doubtful as to whether this ceremony is hinted at in the passage of the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa<sup>41</sup> relating to the 'king-makers' (rāja-kartārah) in the chapter on the mahābhisheka. These 'king-makers' refer, in the Atharva-Veda<sup>42</sup> and the Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa<sup>43</sup> to "those who, not themselves kings, aided in the consecration of the king." According to Sāyana's commentary on the aforesaid passage of the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa, the king's father is one of the king-makers, and this was a ground for Prof. Goldstücker's doubt whether the ceremony in which the father took part might be that for the installation of a crown-prince.<sup>44</sup> A closer examination would, however, make it clear that such a doubt is baseless for the following reasons:—

(1) The mahābhisheka is not an independent ceremony, and the chapter devoted to it is meant to bring out that in days of yore, the abhisheka of Indra (called Mahābhisheka) took place on certain lines with certain mantras followed later on by several emperors of antiquity on the occasion of the celebration of the Rājasūya, and if these rituals and mantras are woven into the Punarabhisheka (i.e., the second abhisheka, the first having been performed at the time of installation to a simple kingship) of the celebrant of a rājasūya of later times, they will be of great efficacy.

(2) The inclusion of the king's father in the list of king-makers by Sāyana, is not borne out by the Vedic texts themselves.

(3) The presence of the father in any installation ceremony cannot of itself raise the presumption that the son performing the ceremony must needs be a crown-prince. For, first, the father might not at all have been a king, and possessing therefore no kingdom to which he could choose his son as successor; and secondly, he might be retiring from his regal position, making his son a full-fledged king by the ceremony.

(4) The question of installation to crown-princship cannot at all rise in view of the setting, in which the king-makers are mentioned, namely, the delineation of the rites and formulas of Indra's mahābhisheka intended to be woven into the ṣunrarabhisheka of the rājasūya.

Hence, there are at present no evidences by which the ceremony of the installation of the crown-prince can be traced to the Vedic period.

Details of the ceremony are not forthcoming from any of the works consulted by me. The Rāmāyaṇa furnishes a short account of the preparations made for Rāma's yauvarājyābhisheka, but as they are not perhaps exhaustive, we cannot draw from them any correct inference as to either the things needed for the ceremony or the rituals and functions in which they were used. The short account is, however, striking in that it does not include water or soil brought from various places, forming a prominent feature of the coronation ceremony and as such receiving the first attention in the preparations for Rāma's coronation.<sup>52</sup>

There was no restriction as to the age at which a successor to a sovereign was installed as the crown-prince. Rāma was twenty-five<sup>53</sup> years old at the time of his proposed installation to crown-princship and Bharata about forty<sup>54</sup> when he was so installed; both Yudhishthira and Satyavāna were young<sup>55</sup> when they went through the ceremony, but Bhīma was far more advanced in years when he became a crown-prince. There was, therefore, no hard and fast age-limit for this ceremony, though it seems to have been the usual practice for the king to choose his successor as soon as the latter completed the prescribed period of studies and was ready to share as crown-prince the responsibilities of a ruler.

No instances are forthcoming to show whether yauvarājyābhisheka was a bar to the subsequent celebration of the coronation ceremony when the crown-prince became the king. Yudhishthira's coronation after the recovery of his kingdom and subsequent to his yauvarājyābhisheka cannot be taken as a case in point in view of its merger in that of restoration to a lost kingdom.<sup>56</sup> That the recovery of a lost kingdom was an occasion for a fresh coronation stands clear from the case of Dyumatsena.<sup>57</sup> Prof. Goldstücker inclines to the view that the performance of the yauvarājyābhisheka "held good for the inauguration of the prince at his accession to the throne, after the father's death, since no mention is made, in the epic poems, of a repetition of the ceremony. The object of the inauguration of a prince as yauvarāja is to secure to him the right of succession, and, besides the advantages supposed to arise from the religious ceremony, as mentioned before, a share in the government, or perhaps all the privileges of a reigning king. For when Daśaratha intends to make his son Rāma a yauvarāja, he addresses him with these words (in the Ayodhya-kāṇḍa,<sup>58</sup>): "Rāma, I am old; . . . To-day, all my subjects want thee for their king; therefore, my son, I shall inaugurate thee as junior king."<sup>59</sup> In the above argument, stress is laid on the words spoken by Daśaratha to the effect that the subjects wanted Rāma as their king (narādhipa) but the force of the very next words uttered by him, viz., "therefore, my son, I shall inaugurate thee as junior king" is ignored. ever Daśaratha might have said on the occasion, the ceremony was nothing else than gruvārājyābhisheka and should be viewed as such.

References to the inauguration of the commander-in-chief are found in the Mahābhārata in connection with the inaugurations of Bhīṣma,<sup>60</sup> Droṇa,<sup>61</sup> Karna,<sup>62</sup> Saṅya,<sup>63</sup> and Aśvatthāmā<sup>64</sup> as the military heads of the Kaurava army. This inauguration ceremony is modelled on that of Kārttikeya,<sup>65</sup> the commander-in-chief of the gods, whose inauguration again followed in some respects the still earlier rājyābhisheka of Varuṇa,<sup>66</sup> the water-god. Details of the ceremony aggregated from the several descriptions are scanty. Those that are expressly mentioned, are oblation to the Homz-fire, seating of the Commander on an appropriate seat, sprinkling of water<sup>67</sup> on his head from a vessel, the utterance of the big formula "surāstvām abhisīñchantu," &c.,<sup>68</sup> which happens to be the same as used in the coronation ceremony just before crowning and gifts of coins, bullion, cows, cloths, &c., to Brāhmanas. It is superfluous to mention that the rituals were accompanied with music, eulogies sung by bards, and joyous and benedictory ejaculations. The inauguration of the several commanders-in-chief mentioned above was performed in the battlefield. In times of peace the same ceremony is likely to have been celebrated on the occasion of the assumption of his office by the commander-in-chief. It is probable that in the former case, the exigencies of the situation compelled a curtailment or abridgement of the rituals which could be allowed to be in their full form in times of peace.

THE LUNAR ZODIAC IN THE BRĀHMAṆAS.

By B. V. KAMEŚVARA AIYAR, M.A.

In the Preface to the fourth volume of the first edition of the Rigveda, the late Professor Maxmüller wrote: "In conclusion, I have to say a few words on an hypothesis according to which the discovery of the twenty-seven nakṣatras was originally made at Babylon and from thence communicated at a very early time—the date is not given—to the Indians in the South, the Chinese in the East and sundry Semitic nations in the West. Such an hypothesis seems almost beyond the reach of scientific criticism, though with the progress of the deciphering of the Babylonian inscriptions, some facts may come to light either to confirm or to refute it. At present, however, all that can be brought forward in proof of such a theory is vague and uncertain and could not stand the test of the most forbearing criticism . . . ."

This was written in 1862. Twenty years later, he again examined this theory in his lectures on "India—What Can It Teach Us?" (pp. 123—133, first edition) and concluded, "With due respect for the astronomical knowledge of those who hold this view, all I can say is that this is a novel, and nothing but a novel, without any facts to support it . . . ."

This theory of the Babylonian origin of the Indian nakṣatras was started by Weber and supported by Whitney, and apparently ceased to be advocated after Maxmüller's vigorous refutation.<sup>1</sup> I was therefore surprised to find Professor A. B. Keith reviving the theory in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (January 1917, pp. 135,

<sup>68</sup> In the legend of Kārttikeya's inauguration to generalship the above formula was not recited at all; deities named in the formula personally appeared before him to take part in the sprinkling.

<sup>1</sup> Whitney, however, maintained his view to the last. He wrote in 1891, "Weber and I, on whatever other points we may have been discordant, agreed entirely, some thirty-five years ago, that it must have been introduced into India, probably out of Mesopotamia; nor, I believe, has either of us seen any reason for changing his conviction since." Vide The Indian Antiquary, Vol. XXIV, p. 365.

136). He writes " . . . in the absence of any evidence as to the real origin of the nakshatras, the priority of *Kṛttikā*s has been insoluble. But the Babylonian hypothesis of their origin still remains the most plausible and for an ingenious argument I would refer to a comparatively recent article by Lehmann Haupt. If so, then the effort to prove the origin of the position of *Kṛttikā*s by Indian literature must be unsuccessful."

I have not been able to get a copy of ZDMG. (Lxvi) containing this ingenious argument. But from the way in which Prof. Keith writes I am inclined to think that he does not attach much value to it. Now that Prof. Keith has chosen to revive a theory long given up, he should, in fairness, bring together all the fresh evidence that Babylonian researches might have brought to light since 1882 and discuss their evidentiary value and at least show that the theory is not so baseless as Maxmüller had pronounced it to be. It is an important question involving wide issues and deserves more than a digressive hit that the Professor has chosen to give it.

To a lay mind it would appear that there is nothing in common between the Indian ecliptic of the twenty-seven nakshatras and the Babylonian zodiac. (1) The former is lunar; the latter, by all accounts, was solar. (2) In the earliest Indian literature where it is found, that is, the Brāhmaṇas, there is no attempt to divide the 27 nakshatras into 12 sections and allot two or three to each section and there is no reference to the planets. "The Chaldeans chose three stars in each sign to be the Councillor gods of the planets."<sup>2</sup> (3) The first sign (whether Aries, so far as records go, or Taurus, as later traditions indicate,) coincided with the vernal equinox. There is no evidence in Indian literature to show that the Indians began their year with the vernal equinox before the introduction of the Alexandrian School of astronomy into India<sup>3</sup> about the fourth or the fifth century A.D. (4) There is not the slightest evidence in the Brāhmaṇa literature to show that the Brāhma-vādins of the Brāhmaṇa period were aware of the twelve signs of the Babylonian or the later Indian solar zodiac or any pictorial representations of these signs, such as the Ram, the Bull, etc., or that the words mesha, vṛishabha, etc., were used technically to denote the signs of a solar zodiac. (5) In Babylonia 'we find a week of seven and another of five days' (Ency. Brit., 11th ed., Vol. 3, p. 167). The Brāhmaṇas know neither, but have instead a period of 6 days (Shakāha), five of which made a month. (6) In Babylonia, the 12 months were named after the 12 zodiacal signs. In the Brāhmaṇas, the 12 months are named after the 12 nakshatras at or near which the moon successively became full. (7) The Brāhmaṇic asterismal system commenced with the Pleiades. There is nothing to show that the first sign in Babylonia was headed by this asterism.

Maxmüller wrote in 1882:<sup>4</sup> "Now the Babylonian zodiac was solar, and, in spite of repeated researches, no trace of a lunar zodiac has been found, where so many things have been found, in the Cuneiform inscriptions. But supposing even that a lunar zodiac had been discovered in Babylon, no one acquainted with Vedic literature and with the ancient Vedic ceremonial would easily allow himself to be persuaded that the Hindus had borrowed that simple division of the sky from the Babylonians . . . Surely it would be a senseless hypothesis to imagine that the Vedic shepherds or priests went to Babylonia in search of a knowledge which every shepherd might have acquired on the banks of the Indus . . . ." And after thirty years' further Babylonian research and exploration, the latest edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica (art: "Zodiac") could only write: "The alternative view, advocated by Weber, that the lunar zodiac was primitively Chaldean, rests on a very shadowy foundation. Euphratean exploration has so far brought to light no traces of ecliptical partition by the moon's diurnal motion, unless, indeed, zodiacal associations be claimed for a set of twenty-eight deprecatory formulæ against evil spirits inscribed on a Ninevite tablet."

<sup>2</sup> Vide, for instance, the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, July 1917, p. 499, footnote:—" . . . Only the Roman Calendar and the year of Nabonidus reckon from the spring. Dr. Fleet thought that Brāhmaṇas must have visited Rome. Perhaps so; but it is more probable, I think, that they took the spring equinox for their starting-point from the year of Nabonidus. When the Alexandrian astronomers reformed their Calendar in the reign of Diocletian, they based their reform upon the Nabonidus era; and these astronomers were the teachers of the Indians."

In the Brāhmaṇa literature, including the Taittirīya and other later Saṃhitās, we find only the lunar ecliptic, with the twenty-seven<sup>5</sup> nakṣatras with the Kṛttikas heading the list and no mention of mesha, Vṛishabha, etc., as the signs or representations of a zodiac. On the other hand, no reference has been found in Babylonian inscriptions to the division of the zodiac based on the diurnal revolution of the moon among these asterisms. There is not a single point in common between the Babylonian zodiac, so far as it is known and the Indian ecliptic, as it is found in the Brāhmaṇas. The Brāhmaṇa literature (Vāj. Sam. XXX. 10; Taitt. Br. III. 4-4-1) refers to observers of stars (nakṣatra-darsīnas) as a profession; and yet it is assumed that the Brahmanavādins must have borrowed the elementary scheme from some country which shows no traces of such a scheme.

Professor A. A. Macdonell, in his review of my dissertation on the age of the Brāhmaṇas, which was intended for the Oriental Congress which was to have assembled at Oxford in 1915, wrote to me, "The origin of the Nakṣatras is an unsolved mystery and so long as this is the case conjectures based on their original signification must remain without value as proof of any theory."

We find the lunar ecliptic of 27 nakṣatras referred to in several places in the later Saṃhitās and the Brāhmaṇas. We find a knowledge of this lunar ecliptic in the marriage hymn of the Rigveda (X. 85-13) where the expressions aghāsu and arjunyok mean "on the days when the moon is in conjunction with these asterisms." As the Encyclopædia Britannica (art: "Zodiac", 11th edition) says of the Indian Zodiac: "We find nowhere else a well authenticated zodiacal sequence corresponding to so early a date." Why then should one seek for the origin of the nakṣatras in any other ancient country, where no traces of the same have been found after years of research. You find it there in ancient Indian literature and you do not find the like of it in any other country at so early a period. It is again a scheme which could have been easily worked out in the land of the Indus, by a people with as much knowledge of civilised life as is exhibited in the Rigveda. Would it be fair or competent criticism, then, to say that the ancient Indians must have borrowed the simple scheme from some country not definitely known (from Babylonia or China), at some unknown or indeterminable period, simply because a Biot, a Weber, or a Whitney had started theories which half a century of further research has left where they stood when they were started?

Scientific criticism is concerned with evidence and so long as no evidence is forthcoming, if not to prove, at least to lend some amount of probability to the foreign origin of the Nakṣatra ecliptic, it will not be fair to reject as valueless any legitimate inference that may be drawn from the statements about the nakṣatras that we may find in the Brāhmaṇas; leaving aside the conjectures based on the etymological significance of the names of the nakṣatras, such as those indulged in by Bentley for instance, which have of course little value as evidence.

<sup>5</sup> Only 27 are given in the earlier list in Taitt. Sam. IV. 4. 10, 1-3 and in Taitt. Br. I. 5-1. Taitt. Br. I. 5-2 adds that in addition to the 27 nakṣatras mentioned in the previous anuvāka, there is another called abhiṣit (a Lyre) which should be looked for in the sky between the (uttara) aśvīn and the śrāvaṇa and that the Devas conquered the Asuras under this nakṣatra and therefore expeditions should be set out under it. This nakṣatra is accordingly included in the nakṣatreshṭhi in Taitt. Br. III. 2-1-6, notwithstanding its remoteness from the ecliptic.

CHANDRA'S CONQUEST OF BENGAL.

BY RADHAGOVINDA BASAK, M.A. ; CALCUTTA.

IN the early part of the fourth century A.D., there was a great defeat of the people of Bengal (Vaṅga) by a king named Chandra. This event is mentioned in an inscription<sup>1</sup> incised in early Gupta characters on a pillar of cast iron known to historians as the "Meherauli Posthumous Iron Pillar Inscription of Chandra." There has not yet been an end of discussion as to the identity of this Chandra. The late Dr. Fleet thought that the characters of this inscription "approximate in many respects very closely to those of the Allahabad posthumous inscription of Samudragupta" and remarks<sup>2</sup> that he "should not be surprised to find at any time that it is proved to belong to him," i.e., Chandragupta I, the first mahārājādhirāja of the Gupta family, of whose time we have as yet no inscriptions. Dr. Hoernle<sup>3</sup> assigns the inscription to the beginning of the fifth century A.D.; and Mr. Vincent Smith, in the second edition<sup>4</sup> of his "Early History of India", expressed his conviction that the Chandra of the inscription was Chandragupta II, who, he thought, had to quell a rebellion of the people of Bengal when they offered him an united resistance in battle. If the inscription could be ascribed to the time of Chandragupta II and the king Chandra be identified with the latter—it may be well said with Mr. Allan<sup>5</sup> that "the enemies who had united against him in the Vaṅga country were probably peoples who had taken the opportunity of his absence in the west to cast off the yoke under which his father had laid them." But Mr. Vincent Smith has since changed his opinion and has accepted the view of Mahamahōpādhyāya Haraprasād Sāstri, that the Chandra of the Iron Pillar Inscription was not at all a Gupta ruler and that he should be identified with Chandravarman mentioned in the Allahabad Pillar inscription of Samudragupta's time. This Chandravarman, it should be remembered, was one of the nine kings<sup>6</sup> of Āryyāvarta who were violently extirpated, during his campaign of conquests in Northern India, by Samudragupta, who thus increased his majestic power in the North. Pandit Sāstri while proving this identity of Chandra of the Iron Pillar inscription and Chandravarman (king of Pushkaraṇṇa, Pokharan or Pokurṇa of Rājaputānā) based his arguments on two inscriptions, viz., (1) the Māndasor stone-inscription<sup>7</sup> of Naravarman of the Mālava era 461, and (2) the Susunia Hill inscription<sup>8</sup> of Chandravarman, king of Pushkaraṇṇa. From the first of these inscriptions, we have the following historical information:—"This Vaishnavite inscription was incised in 461 of the era of the Mālavagana, i.e., in A.D. 404, when king (parikṣit) Naravarman (using the title mahārāja), son of king Simhavarman and grandson of king Jayavarman, was ruling that part of the country, i.e. Mālava." We know from epigraphic records that in A.D. 404 Chandragupta II was on the imperial Gupta throne. Hence we may safely suppose that Mahārāja Naravarman was Chandragupta II's feudatory in the Western region, probably having his head-quarters in the town of Daśapura (modern

Māndasor), just as we gather from other records<sup>9</sup> that his son Viśvavarman and his son Bandhuvarman were feudatories of Kumāragupta I. The second inscription which is inscribed in early Gupta characters of the Northern variety records the dedication of a wheel in honour of a god (evidently Viṣṇu) named Chakrasvāmin and it only states in its two lines<sup>10</sup> of writing that this dedication is a pious deed (kṛti) of mahārāja Chandravarman, son of mahārāja Śiṃhavarman, king of Pushkarāṇa. The use of the subordinate title of mahārāja with the names of these kings shows that Pushkarāṇa was one of the many small states that were being ruled independently before their subjugation by Samudragupta. In the first inscription we have mahārāja Naravarman as the son of Śiṃhavarman and in the second mahārāja Chandravarman as the son of the same king. This fact led Pandit Śāstri to suggest, rightly enough, that Naravarman and Chandravarman were brothers.<sup>11</sup> It has been said before that Naravarman was a contemporary of Chandragupta II, son of Samudragupta, whereas Chandravarman was Samudragupta's contemporary. Hence it may be rightly supposed that Chandravarman was Naravarman's elder brother. The identity of Chandravarman of Samudragupta's inscription and Chandravarman, king of Pushkarāṇa, of the Susunia Hill inscription, as established by Pandit Śāstri seems to be quite right. But there is much difficulty in proving undoubtedly that this Chandravarman and the Chandra of the Iron Pillar inscription are identical. Samudragupta probably destroyed the independence only of the nine kings of Northern India amongst whom Chandravarman was one, and allowed them after their utter defeat to rule in their respective states as Gupta feudatories. Chandravarman, his father Śiṃhavarman, and his grandfather Jayavarman may have had mastery over a greater part of Mālava and had their capital at Pushkarāṇa; and they had thus ruled independently before Samudragupta advanced in his campaign of conquests and reduced the power of the Varman family of Pushkarāṇa by defeating its king Chandravarman and probably placing his younger brother Naravarman to the position of a feudatory chief ruling from Daśapura. It may also be supposed that Naravarman succeeded to the rulership after the death of his elder brother Chandravarman. We have said before that Naravarman's son, Viśvavarman and his son Bandhuvarman were feudatory kings under Kumāragupta I ruling in Mālava from their capital Daśapura. From the Gangdhar Stone inscription (Fleet, No. 17) we find that Viśvavarman, son of Naravarman, was a very powerful ruler (tasmin prādisati mahān-ṛipati-pravīrē ll. 17-18) in the year 480, evidently of the Mālava era, and from the Māndasor stone inscription (Fleet, No. 18) we know that Bandhuvarman, son of the ruler (gōptā) Viśvavarman was governing the city of Daśapura (kṣhītipati-viśhē Bandhuvarmmani.....Daśapuram=

idaṃ pālayati, l. 16), while Kumāragupta I was ruling the earth in 493 M.E. (Kumāragupta puthura pravāsati, l. 13). Hence, Pandit Śāstri's statement<sup>12</sup>—"Mr. Smith is wrong, I believe, in including Māndasor in the map of Samudragupta's conquest. For Naravarman and his son Viśvarvarman do not seem to have acknowledged any obligation to the Guptas"—is not vouchsafed by epigraphic evidence which seems rather to lead to a contrary conclusion.

To prove completely that the Chandravarman of Pushkarana and the Chandra of the Iron Pillar inscription are identical, one has to establish, first of all, that Chandravarman came to Bengal on a campaign of conquests. But the Susunia Hill inscription has not the slightest reference to any conquest by the king of Pushkarana (Pushkaranaḍḍhipati). It simply states, as already pointed out, that the dedication of the wheel is a pious "deed of mahārāja Chandravarman, son of mahārāja Śinhavarman, king of Pushkarana." It does not at all say "that Chandra of Pokarna did conquer that part of the country" as boldly asserted by Pandit Śāstri. Chandravarman seems to have gone there on a pilgrimage to the hill-cave to do honour to the god Chakrasvāmin, and it was probably a very famous place of pilgrimage in old days also. It may be advanced as an argument that as the wheel in the Susunia Hill cave and the flag-staff (dvaja) of the Iron Pillar are both sacred to the god Viṣṇu, it favours the identity of Chandravarman and Chandra. But we know that the Gupta rulers too were themselves devotees of Viṣṇu (paramabhāgavata).

Let us now consider the historical data that can be obtained from the Meharauli Iron Pillar inscription:—

- (i) King Chandra destroyed his enemies in Bengal (Vaṅgēśku) who offered an united resistance against him.
- (ii) He, in course of war, crossed the seven mouths of the Indus (Sindhu) and overcame the Vāhlikas.
- (iii) The Southern Ocean was to-day (even after his death) being perfumed by the breezes of his prowess, i.e., who probably proceeded towards the South for making conquests.
- (iv) His majestic glory still lingered on earth in the shape of fame even after his death.
- (v) He enjoyed for a very long time lord-paramountcy (aikādhirājyaḥ) on earth earned by the strength of his own arms (svabhuj-ārjjitaḥ), i.e., he was a mahārājādhirāja, a title which he himself earned by his own prowess.
- (vi) He was a Vaiṣṇava and established this pillar as a flag-staff of the god Viṣṇu on the Viṣṇupada hill.

From these data we find that Chandra was a mighty monarch and had the title of mahārājādhirāja (stated for metrical exigencies as aikādhirājyaḥ prāptena, l. 5), whereas Chandravarman is simply mentioned in the Susunia inscription with the title mahārāja, which, in early times especially during the Gupta period, was used by kings of smaller states and by feudatory rulers. The datum (v) above is most significant. The statement that Chandra earned supreme sovereignty in the world by means of his own arms (svabhuj-ārjjitaḥ aikādhirājyaḥ) and enjoyed it for a long time (chiraḥ) and that he led his arms of conquest to the distant countries of Vāṅga in the east and to the country washed by the mouths of the Indus on the west, and also towards the south, applies more to an early Gupta ruler of the fourth century than to any local king of any of the small states then ruling independently in Northern India. There is no Paurāṇic or epigraphic evidence to show that any other family of kings made any attempt in the fourth century A.D. to assume imperial dignity by conquering distant lands. So it is very likely that Samudragupta's father, Chandragupta I, whom we know to have been the first mahārājādhirāja of the Gupta line, began to establish the empire by going out for making conquests in Bengal, in part of the Panjab and also in the South, and perhaps succeeded in incorporating portions at least of these provinces into his own kingdom, which, after his death, passed into Samudragupta's hands. It is perhaps for this reason that we find in Samudragupta's Allahabad Pillar inscription no mention of Bengal being conquered by that monarch who inherited his father's self-made empire which had already comprised Bengal. Where is the evidence that Bengal had ever been in the possession of Chandravarman? Had it been so, we would have to seek for evidence to prove that Bengal was afterwards recovered from the hands of the Varman rulers of Mālava by the Gupta rulers. But we have as yet got no such historical evidence, nor can we expect to get it in future. On the contrary, we know from the newly discovered Dāmōdarpur plates of the Gupta period that Bengal was under the direct political jurisdiction of Kumāragupta I and his successors. It seems plausible that Samudragupta ordered this posthumous inscription to be inscribed on this costly pillar of iron which his late father mahārājādhirāja Chandragupta I caused to be erected as a flag-staff in honour of Vishnu; and as the ancestors of his father were local chiefs having the use of the title mahārāja only, Samudragupta did not perhaps ask the court-poet to refer to any genealogy in the inscription. Hence we are inclined to believe with the late Dr. Fleet that the Chandra of the Iron Pillar is the first Gupta mahārājādhirāja Chandragupta I, and this accounts for the striking paleographical similarity of this inscription with the Allahabad Pillar inscription of Samudragupta's time.

In discussing the age of the compilation of the dynastic account in the Purāṇas Mr. Pargiter<sup>13</sup> writes:—"The Guptas are mentioned as reigning over the country comprised within Prayāga, Śāketa (Ayōdhyā), and Magadha, that is exactly the territory which was possessed at his death by Chandragupta I, who founded the Gupta dynasty in A.D. 319-20 and reigned till 326 or 330 (or even till 335 perhaps), before it was extended by the conquests of his son and successor Samudragupta;" and he holds the view that as the Paurāṇic account does not take any notice of Samudragupta's conquests nor of the Gupta empire, the narrative was closed during the interval which elapsed between the time when Chandragupta I established his kingdom from Magadha over Tirhut, Bihar and Oudh as far as Allahabad, and the beginning of Samudragupta's reign. But it may also be presumed that this Paurāṇic account of the extent of the Gupta empire had been compiled before Chandragupta I defeated the people of Bengal and the Vālhikas, which even probably took place towards the end of the reign of Chandragupta I. Or, it may be supposed that the Magadha of the Purāṇas probably included the portions of Bengal conquered. Had the conquest of Bengal fallen to the lot of Samudragupta the event would have very likely found mention in his Allahabad Pillar inscription. Moreover, the discovery, in parts of Bengal, of coins of various types belonging to Samudragupta and his successors, may be cited as an evidence, though somewhat insufficient, of Gupta supremacy in Bengal during the early period of Gupta rule in India.

MISCELLANEA.

TIPU SULTAN'S LETTERS AT ŚRĪNGERĪ.

The labours of Mr. R. Narasimhachar, Officer in charge of Archaeological Researches in Mysore, have recently been rewarded with the discovery of some letters of Tipu Sultan, in the Śrīngeri Matha of Śrī-Śaṅkarāchārya, that shed a new light upon the character of the last Sultan of Mysore (ante, 1917, p. 136). Their purport, however, is apparently so incredible and contrary to all accepted views that we would certainly hesitate to accept them as genuine, had not other materials from quite an unexpected quarter been available, for their confirmation. The Svāmī of Śrīngeri was generally styled as the Peshwa's guru; religious and social questions were often referred to him for decision by the Peshwas; to them the lineal successor of Śrī-Śaṅkarāchārya was almost a semi-divinity—a Pope, an exponent of divine will. Yet these letters tell us that a Mahratta army, under the command of a Brahman general, Pariurām Bhau Patwardhan, had ruthlessly plundered the temple and village and carried their sacrilege so far as to break and defile the image of the goddess Śārādā. All these details, however, are confirmed by two letters written from the Mahratta Camp. Both of these have been published in the 9th volume of Mr. V. V. Khare's Ātīthārik Lekha-Saṅgraha, but an English translation may here be added, for those who are not acquainted with Marāṭhī. The first of these was dated the 23rd of April, 1791, and was addressed to Bājā Sāheb at Miraj. Nīlkanth Āppājī, the correspondent of Bājā Sāheb, writes: "The Lamāns and the Pegdhāris went from the army of Rājārī Dādā Sāheb, plundered the temple of Śrīngeriṅkar Svāmī and took elephants and other property worth about a lac of rupees. They brought these things, yesterday, to a place, about a kos from this camp, and some of our people went there and saw them. Thereupon, a letter has been addressed to Dādā Sāheb, about their confiscation." This letter, written just after the incident, omits all its horrible details; but the second correspondent, who wrote about a month later (the 14th of May), gives a more minute description. Trimbak Rāv Ballāl wrote to Bājāsāheb: "Before the army crossed the Tuṅgabhadra the Lamāns and the Pegdhāris had gone towards Śivamoghe. They plundered the Svāmī's village of Śrīngeri. They looted the Svāmī's belongings, including his Dapḷa and Kamadalu and left nothing. Women were violated and some of them committed suicide. The Devaliāga and other images belonging to the Svāmī were plundered. The Lamāns took away all his elephants. The Svāmī fasted for five days and died.

"When the Elder (वडिज = Parsurām Bhāu Patwardhan) learnt this news, he sent some horse-men, arrested the Lamāns and recovered the elephants. Besides this, not a Rupee worth of thing was found."

Whether these elephants were restored to the Svāmī, we do not know; but the Svāmī proceeded to the Peshwa's Court at Poona, with a petition for the recovery of his lost property. Mr. Khare, to whom we are indebted for the publication of the above letters, however, argues that Parsurām Bhāu Patwardhan should not be blamed for the deeds of professional plunderers, over whom he could exercise but a feeble control. In fact, the Dādāsāheb, to whose army these offenders were attached, claimed sole jurisdiction over them, and the miscreants were suffered to escape unpunished. Though I am well aware of the great weight that Mr. Khare's name will always lend to the view he supports, I think we cannot so easily absolve Parsurām Bhāu from the crime of sacrilege and plunder. For these Pegdhāris were not independent free-booters, but they formed an integral part of the Mahratta army. Moreover, their deeds were legalised by the tacit sanction of the State, for they were granted license in consideration of a tax called Pāl Paṭṭī or tent dues. This tax was rated at 25 per cent. of their plunder, and the State therefore directly participated in their misdeeds, by sharing with them their ill-earned income. We should also remember that Dādā Sāheb (Raghunāth Rāv Kurundwāḍkar), the officer directly responsible for protecting the offenders, was not a rival of Parsurām. On the contrary, he was a friend, to whom the command of the Patwardhan forces had been entrusted, after the withdrawal of Parsurām Bhāu to his Jāgr during the late war against Tipu. Perhaps the Pegdhāris were on this occasion allowed unbridled license, and the reason will be found in the following remark made by Moore,—in his narrative of Captain Little's Detachment: "The mutual acts of plunder and devastations now committed by the Mysoreans and the Mahrattas, proceed solely from a personal hatred and detestation between Puresam Bhow and the Sultan, and perhaps there are no two men existing who more mortally hated each other. Tippoo, it is said, either by his own hand or direction was the immediate cause of the death of Bhow's brother. Hurry Pant's army, which left Seringapatam at the same time, . . . was not at all molested." In all probability, the Svāmi of Śringeri fell a victim to Bhan's hatred, because he happened to be the Sultan's subject.

Another point that may surprise the reader of these letters is, that Tipu should help the Svāmi substantially in reinstalling the image. Tipu is generally represented as a bigoted follower of the prophet of Mecca, and we learn from the evidence of Husheini Aly—a contemporary and by no means a hostile historian—that Tipu was not at all favourably disposed towards the Hindus. Yet both Moore, an English writer and an enemy of Tipu, and Michaud, a French historian, testify to the happiness and contentment that ordinarily prevailed in Mysore, during Tipu's reign. According to Michaud, "the Sultan was very popular, very affable, and very well informed." Moore says: "It has fallen to our lot to tarry sometime in Tippoo's dominions and to travel through them as much as, if not more than, any officer in the field during the war, and we have reason to suppose his subjects to be as happy as those of any other sovereign; or we do not recollect to have heard any complaints or murmurings among them, although had causes existed, no time could have been more favourable for their utterance, because the enemies of Tippoo were in power, and would have been gratified by any aspersion of his character. The inhabitants of the conquered countries submitted with apparent resignation to the direction of their conquerors, but by no means as if relieved from an oppressive yoke in their former Government. On the contrary no sooner did an opportunity offer, than they scouted their new masters, and gladly returned to their loyalty again." About the intolerant doctrines of Muhammadanism, Michaud remarks that "the sweetness of peace removed all that is fierce in the doctrine of Mahomet." This appears to be inconsistent with Husheini Aly's evidence, who says that the Sultan conferred on the Hindu population of Naragood and Kittur, the good fortune of circumcision and conversion. The apparent contradiction is not however difficult to explain: Tipu tolerated the practice of Hindu religion within his own territories, and became popular with all his subjects, but the same toleration was not extended to the population of the enemy countries by the zealous Muhammadan ruler of Mysore.

BOOK-NOTICE.

MAHARĀJĀ KUMBHA, 1917, AND MAHARĀJĀ SINGH, 1918, BY HAN BILAS SARDA, F.R.S.L., Scottish Mission Industries Company, Ltd., Ajmer.

The publication of these two memoirs marks the beginning of a new epoch in the study of the history of Rajputana. The author himself is well known to students of Indian History as the author of Hindu Superiority. These two monographs are the precursors of a series, as the author himself explains in his preface to Mahārājā Kumbha. Colonel Tod's celebrated work is now being amplified, corroborated by epigraphic and other literary evidence and checked by counter-reference to the chronicles of Musalman historians on the subject. This, in fact, is the application of modern critical methods of historical research to the history of Rajputana.

Rajputana, like Nepal, possesses the unique distinction of never having been under Muhammadan rule, and here we see the gradual transformation of the mediæval period of Indian History into the modern. Elsewhere in India, the mediæval period of Indian History closes with a snap as soon as the native sovereign is overthrown by the Muhammadans. History becomes an imperfect chronicle of the wars of Muhammadan princes and their subordinates on their neighbours or on scattered Hindu principalities which had succeeded in maintaining a precarious existence in impregnable, out-of-the-way places. In Rajputana the situation is entirely different. Here old dynasties continued to rule and to defy the attempts of successive dynasties of Muhammadan kings to subdue the last strongholds of the infidels. Sovereigns of Northern India and their descendants sought refuge in this country when ousted from their ancestral territories by Muhammadans. In this respect the history of Rajputana is as valuable and as interesting to the student of Indian History as that of Nepal or of distant Tibet.

In the monographs under review Mr. Sarma has presented the history of the premier kingdom of Rajputana, i.e. Mewar, from A.D. 1364 to 1526. Incidentally he informs his readers of the major events of other States, such as Marwar, Sirohi, etc., as they are inseparably linked with the history of Mewar in this period.

The first monograph opens with the period of the reign of Rājā Kshetra Simha, the son of the celebrated Rājā Hammira Deva and the great-grandfather of Mahārājā Kumbha (chapter II). It gives a concise and very lucid summary of the reigns of Kshetra Simha, Lakṣhā and Mokāl, and describes the days of Rathor influence in the court of Mewar. The next chapter deals with the short war with the Gujarat Sultanat and the beginning of the struggle with the Sultans of Malwa. The fifth chapter is of engrossing interest as it deals with the end of Rāthor influence in Mewar and with the conquest of Marwar by the Mahārāṇās. The next chapter deals with the struggles of Rao Jodha, the founder of Jodhpur, for independence and the creation of the State of Jodhpur. Of much greater importance is the chapter on the long wars of Kumbha with the Sultans of Malwa and Gujarat. Here, for the first time, we find the chronicles of the Muhammadan historians checked and refuted by contemporary Hindu evidence. From the raids of the treebooters of Samana on the Hindu inhabitants of Kabul and Balkh in the 10th century A.D. to the death of Aurangzeb, the chronicles of Musalman historians appear to be an unbroken list of victories for Islam. Checks and defeats have been carefully censored and erased from historical works in Persian. The estimation of the proper value of a history or chronicle written by a Musalman dealing with wars between the true believer and the infidel has been a long and difficult process. The absence of contemporary Hindu evidence and the rarity of corroborative evidence has made the process a very tedious one. But in the long run a true estimate of the value of Muhammadan historical works has been formed in Northern India. In Rajputana the process is much easier. Mr. Sarda, with the true critical spirit, declares the battle of Mandargarh to be indecisive (p. 48), and refutes Ferishta's claim for a victory for Mahmud Shah II of Malwa by producing contemporary evidence which proves the contrary. Similarly Ferishta's claim for a victory in 1446 has been ably refuted by Mr. Sarda in a long footnote, where Muhammad Kasim's favourite lies have been very neatly exposed (p. 49). So far as my knowledge goes, this is the first time that the lies, inaccuracies, and deliberate mis-statements of this bigoted chronicler, who is relied on by the majority of European historians, are being exposed. Ferishta's claim for a victory for the Sultan of Gujarat and a war indemnity of fourteen maunds of gold received by him has been very ably dealt with on pp. 60-61. So much so that the next historian of Gujarat will be obliged to change certain well-known features of the history of that State. The eighth chapter deals with Kumbha's murder by the patricide Udā, and contains a summary of his exploits based upon epigraphical evidence. The next chapter gives a lucid account of Rajput Architecture of the period and of monuments erected by Kumbha; the tenth and last chapter gives a summary of Kumbha's literary attainments and describes the works composed by him.

The second memoir of the series, Mahārāṇā Sāṅgā, is a larger work and deals with a shorter period. The opening chapter gives a short sketch of Sāṅgā's character, while the following three chapters contain an excellent summary of the period intervening between the death of Mahārāṇā Kumbha and the accession of Sāṅgā. Here the author has shown how the weak rule of Sāṅgā's predecessors led to the dismemberment of the vast dominions of Kumbha and how dissensions among members of the ruling clan led to the weakening of the power of the Mahārāṇās of Mewar. In the end of the fifth chapter the author deals with Sāṅgā's first war with the powerful Muhammadan kingdom of Gujarat, and in the succeeding one his first war with the Sultans of Delhi when Ibrahim, the weak successor of Sikandar Lodi, was defeated and forced to fly. A second expedition led by the foremost Afghan leaders met with no better result and the frontiers of Mewar reached those of the Afghan Kingdom of Delhi, incidentally paving the way for the final struggle at Khanua. The seventh chapter deals with the struggle between the Hindu and Musalman vassals of the kingdom of Malwa which led to its extinction by its powerful neighbours, and Sāṅgā's victory over and the capture of the person of Sultan Mahmud Khilji II. The conquest of Malwa brought about a war with the Sultans of Gujarat, which is described in the eighth chapter. The struggle between Mewar and Gujarat is continued in the next two chapters, where the futile counter-expeditions from Gujarat are described.

The most important chapters of the work are those which describe the struggle of Mewar with the incoming foreigner, the Mongols or, as they are called in India, Mughals. The eleventh chapter gives a short description of the earlier adventures of Zahiruddin Muhammad Babar Padshah, and the twelfth gives a succinct summary of the various stages which brought the two important figures of Indian History, Babar and Sāṅgā, face to face.

The author's detailed description of the events preceding the battle of Khanua and that of the battle itself shows that the Indian method of warfare (dharma-yuddha) was not the proper method in a war with foreigners, and confirms one of the most prominent conclusions of Indian History, that the fall of Indian Empires has always been due to defection and treachery rather than to weakness and defeat. The thirteenth chapter of the work gives us the first chapter of the history of the struggle between the Sisodia and the Chaghatai from a new standpoint, the Rajput or Indian standpoint, which has more or less been systematically ignored by European historiographers.

I have met with in the bazars another known standard, viz., kōjātchaukmā, or Rs. 9 mūs 6 out of Rs. 10 of pure gold (k'ayūbāt), = 96%.<sup>49</sup>

Prinsep adds, Useful Tables, p. 32, that the Burmese called gold mohars 8½ mūs standard, i.e., shi'mūpè, and I may add that English jewellers' gold they insist on calling brass.<sup>45</sup>

It will be observed that, in reckoning the touch of silver and gold respectively, the sense of the terms is reversed. In reckoning silver touch the amount of alloy in the piece is mentioned whereas in reckoning gold the amount of gold in the piece is mentioned, Indian fashion.

Many standards of gold between k'ayūbāt and mōjō (spelt properly mōgh<sup>50</sup> krō<sup>51</sup>, but I have also seen mō<sup>52</sup> kyo<sup>53</sup>) are, however, known to jewellers, and I give below a representation, two-thirds full size, of a set of touch needles or standards, which I procured from a bankrupt jeweller in Mandalay in 1889, showing nine standards, viz., 95%, 90%, 85%, 80%, <sup>42</sup> I have a note of this term, where it is spelt k'ayūbāt. Stevenson, Dict., gives shadgaung; and shadū is the "best kind of gold." But these terms merely mean "good gold," and "red gold." The Burmese are fond of "red gold," but gold can only be "red" when alloyed with copper. "Red gold" cannot therefore be really the "best kind of gold." According to Bock, Temples and Elephants, p. 398, the Siamese recognised six gold standards as a very ancient custom. Each standard had a name, which he gives in his curious spelling. He says, upon some local information apparently, that the standards date back to A.D. 1347.

SCALE :  $\frac{2}{3}$  ACTUAL SIZE.

In reference to touch needle for gold, the observant Lockyer is worth quoting here. At p. 132 ff., Trade in India, 1711, he writes as to Canton especially :—

"Gold is a Metal of such Value, that a small Mistake in its Fineness may be two or three per Cent Loss to the Buyer. The Chinese reckon by Touches, 100 is full fine, and equal to 24 Carraets English ; wherefore a Set of Touches with Silver Allay, from 50 to 100 touch, rising gradually as you are able to discern the Difference of Colours on a Touch Stone, would be a great Help ; tho' it must be a nice Judgment to distinguish a Touch (or 100th part) . . . . Sometimes they make it not above 50 or 60 Touch, and guild it four or five times over ; so that relying on your smooth Stones, you are liable to be imposed on : Therefore I look on the rougher ones that are used by the Banians of Indostan, with a Ball of Black Wax, to be the best : But for want of these raise the Sides with a Graver, or cut it half through with a Chisel, and break the rest ; whence you may see the Colour and Grain, and easily detect their Fraud ; should you cut it quite thro', the Chisel will so draw the Gold over the Allay, that you can learn nothing by it." Again, after explaining that copper alloy will make gold appear to be of better quality than pure silver alloy, or mixed silver and copper alloy, Lockyer goes on to quote the advice (p. 137) of one Mr. Hynners as to the use of touchstones :—
"You only want a little Practice to confirm you in this ; and if you have Touches made with the three different Allays I mention'd (Copper, Copper and Silver, and Silver) you cannot be easily deceiv'd with the Copper Allay. Now the use of your Touch-stone : You should during the Term of your Voyage, especially a Month or two before you arrive at China, often practice your Touches, rubbing them on your Stone one by another, till you can know the Difference, which your constantly doing will confirm you in. When your Touch-stone is fill'd, you may clear it by rubbing it with a Piece of fine Charcole and Oyl, or fine Emery Powder and Oyl, or Scuttle-fish Bone ; but remember the smoother you rub the Stone the better will your Touches appear on it, and to wash off the Oyl well after cleaning : For the Touches will not take well, the Stone being Oily. And after you have at any time rubb'd your Touch, and Gold on it, lick it over with your Tongue, and it makes it appear better to know the Difference. If you continually practice and mind these Directions, it will not be an easy matter to deceive you in that Commodity, or put a false Piece upon you: Tho' I must confess ther's no way so sure, certain, and so much to be confided in as an Essay by Fire, both for Gold and for Silver, &c."

From Bock, Temples and Elephants, p. 39Sn., we get a set of six Siamese gold standards,<sup>51</sup> said by him to date so far back as A.D. 1347:—

1. Nopakun-kow-nam	.. .. .	90%
2. Nua-peat	.. .. .	80%
3. Nua-bhet	.. .. .	70%
4. Nua-hok	.. .. .	60%
5. Nua-ha	.. .. .	50%
6. Nua-see	.. .. .	40%

At least, the above is what I gather Bock's informant meant to convey, because "nopakun-kow-nam" would mean in Shân "nine fine in a hundred," or something like it: and pít, set, hók, há and sí mean eight, seven, six, five and four respectively.

By way of comparison with the above remarks on Burmese gold standards, the following information, culled from Stevens, New and Complete Guide to the East India Trade, ed. 1766, is of much interest. At pp. 126-127 he gives a series of "Chinese characters Whereby you may form some Judgment on the Value of their Gold." From this can be extracted the following recognised standards, taking "sycee" as pure or 100 touch.<sup>52</sup>

1. Twangan : in bars wrapped in stamped paper . .	94½ to 95
2. Seong Kutt or Soang Catt . . . . .	90 to 92
3. Tungzee . . . . .	96
4. Tungzee, Yeungzee or Tingwan . . . . .	95
5. Toozee or Toujee . . . . .	92
6. Cheauzee or Swajzee . . . . .	92
7. Seong Pou or Soang Pau . . . . .	93½
8. Yeukxzee, Seongyeukx or Song Yeux . . . . .	94 to 95
9. Pouzee or Seong Po . . . . .	94
10. Chuzee or Chuja : in bars . . . . .	94
11. Chauzee or Swarhzy : in shoes . . . . .	93
12. Ongee . . . . .	90 to 93
13. Toozee . . . . .	92
14. Pouzee or Seong Po : in bars . . . . .	93
15. Cutzee or Songcatt : in shoes . . . . .	90
16. Yeukzee : in shoes wrapped in paper, stamped "the double-ring chop" . . . . .	95 to 96

Lockyer is equally interesting on the subject of Chinese gold standards, p. 132ff. :—
 "Gold-makers (as they are commonly call'd) cast all the Gold, that comes thro' their Hands, into Shoes of about 10 Tale weight, 12oz. 2dwt. 4gr. of an equal Fineness: As one makes them 93 Touch, another is famous for 94, &c. A private Mark is stamped in the Sides, and a

<sup>52</sup> On p. 125 he has the following remarks:—"China Weights . . . . The finest gold among them is 100 touch, called sycee, that is pure gold without any alloy in it . . . . gold bought touch for touch is when ten tale weight of sycee silver is paid for one tale weight of gold . . . . the sycee gold . . . ."

Piece of printed Paper is pasted to the middle of them, by which every one's Make is known as our Cutlers, and other Mechanicks do in their Trades. Both Ends of the Shoos are alike and bigger than in the middle, and thin Brims rising above the rest, whence the upper Side somewhat resembles a Boat; From the middle, which in cooling sinks into a small Pit, arise Circles one within another, like the Rings in the Balls of a Man's Fingers,<sup>53</sup> but bigger: The smaller and closer these are the finer the Gold is. When Silver, Copper or other Metal is inclosed in casting, as sometimes you may meet with it in small Bits, the Sides will be uneven, knobby, and a rising instead of a Sinking in the Middle. . . . They are call'd after the Makers Names, or from the Places whence they come; but I think the former; for, there is a great deal made at Pekin; but none of that Name. Chuja and Chuckja are 93 Touch. Tingza, Shing and Guanza 94. Of these the former turn to the best Account. Sinchupoa and Chuchepoa are reckon'd 96 and 95 Touch. . . . Gold in Bars or Ingots comes chiefly from Cochinchina and Tonqueen, and differs in Fineness from 75 to 100 Touch. 'Tis of several sizes, and easier much than the Shoos to be counterfeited. . . . Bargains for Gold are always so many Tale weight of Currant Silver, 94 Touch, which is really 93. This last remark gives us a valuable hint that travellers and commercial writers, when talking of the "touch" of gold, may not be referring to a percentage of pure gold, but merely to a ratio between gold and some local standard of silver.

Lockyer further lets us into the secret of how the wily European merchant of the early days made a profit for himself out of the inveterate habit of the dealers of the Far East of adulterating their gold. At p. 136, he says:—"All the Eastern people allay their Gold with Silver . . . The coarsest, or Gold of the lowest Touch is most advisable: For, in a parting Essay you get all the Silver that is mix'd with it for nothing, viz, 80 Tale weight Touch 58, is 58 Tale of pure Gold, and 22 Tale of Silver Allay, which you pay not a farthing for."<sup>54</sup> This then was the reason why merchants of A.D. 1700 made themselves familiar with the various sorts of inferior gold, and the next quotation goes to show that the same desire existed a century later.

In that curious book, Comparative Vocabulary of the Burma, Malaya and T'hai Languages, 1810, p. 53, we find môjô (there spelt môkrôv) in Burmese equals in Malay sudsâ, and in Siamese (T'hai) nâk. It is translated "sudsâ,<sup>55</sup> a mixture of gold and copper," showing that this quality of gold was then best known to Europeans by its Malay name.<sup>56</sup>

A correspondent of the Singapore Chronicle in 1827<sup>57</sup> gives an account of the Residency of the North-West Coast of Borneo, and says that "Gold is found in almost every part of the Residency," and that "The price at the principal ports may be taken at about two dollars and ninety cents per touch, or say 26 Spanish dollars of Sintang gold of nine touch," meaning by a "touch" one-tenth pure or standard in the Indian fashion. He also says that gold "takes many names, being invariably designated by the name of the place

<sup>55</sup> Crawford, Malay Grammar, Vol. I, p. clxxxv, gives this word as sudasa, and says that neither copper nor silver is found in the Malay Archipelago. In Vol. II, p. 178, he says that "sudasa is an alloy of gold and copper in about equal parts" and that the word is common to Malay and Javanese.

<sup>56</sup> In Sumatra, in A.D. 1416, the Chinese found a gold stân current of 30% alloy. Indo-China, 2nd Ser., Vol. J, p. 210.

where it is procured." Now from his statements we can make out a table of gold standards for Borneo in 1827 of a precisely similar nature to those prepared already for China and Burma thus:—

Sintang about .. .. .	90	Sangao about .. .. .	90
Landak .. .. .	90	Muntuhari .. .. .	85
Mandor .. .. .	78	Sambas .. .. .	90
Sapan .. .. .	80	Larak .. .. .	85
Siminis .. .. .	80	Salakao .. .. .	75

In a Report on Borneo<sup>58</sup> submitted to Sir Stamford Raffles in 1812, it is said that "The standard of Slakow gold at Pontiana is fixed at 23 Spanish dollars the bunkal of two dollars weight. The Songo and Laurat is 25 dollars the said bunkal." But the price obviously depended really on the touch.

In yet another Report,<sup>59</sup> dated c. 1836, on Johole in the Malay Peninsula, the writer gives first a most interesting, for the present purpose, account of the "bunkal" and then of some contemporary gold standards in those parts. He says:—"The gold dust is again carefully washed and . . . dried by means of a red-hot piece of charcoal being repeatedly passed over its surface. After the adherent finer particles of sand have been removed, it is weighed into quantities, generally of one tael each, which are carefully folded up in small pieces of cloth. These packets constitute the Bunkals of Commerce. In Sumatra, according to Marsden, the parcels or Bulses, in which the gold is packed up, are formed of the integument that covers the heart of the buffalo. The Bunkals are, as in Sumatra, frequently used as currency instead of coin."<sup>60</sup>

After explaining that the Malayan mutu is the same as the Indian touch, the writer gives the following quaint, but withal useful, table of standards:—

Gold of Reccan [Arakan] ..	95	Mount Ophir <sup>61</sup> .. ..	92½
Chimendros and Taon.. ..	95	Pahang and Jellye .. ..	92½
Tringanu .. .. .	92½	Calantan .. .. .	92½

From Calantan gold of 10-mutu [100 'touch'] is sometimes obtained.

As a curious instance of gold being used purely as a money of account I may quote from the Chinese Tung Hsi Yang K'au, c. 1618, in Indo-China, 2nd. Ser., Vol. I, p. 199:—"When the men of Jambi [in Sumatra] bargain for goods, the price is agreed upon in gold, but they pay only with pepper: e.g., if something costs two taels of gold, they pay a hundred picols of pepper, or thereabout. They like to buy outside women, and girls from other countries are often brought here and sold for pepper."

Lead.

Lump lead currency, well known also in Lower Burma, is called simply k'ègè, or lump ead. Fig. 14, Plate I, shows a piece which has been chipped off a large one, and used, I believe, for genuine currency. I procured it from an old woman in 1888 at Mandalay, who told me that she had kept it by her for forty years, since the days of Shwébô Min. Now Shwébô Min, the King Tharrawaddy of most European writers, reigned 1837-1846,<sup>62</sup> so her statement was sufficiently accurate. A large lump, partly chipped, with hammer and chisel, just as procured from a village stall in the Mandalay district, is now in the British Museum.<sup>63</sup>

Yule says, Ava, p. 259, that in 1855, baskets of lead for exchange were prominent objects in markets.<sup>64</sup> And so does Malcolm, Travels, Vol. I, p. 269, when writing of Lower Burma in 1835.

Flouest, writing of Pegu and Rangoon in 1786, says (Toung Pao, Vol. II, p. 41) the same thing :—"La monnoye courante dans les bazards ou marchés est du plomb coupé par morceaux de différentes grosseurs : ils ont des balances dans lesquelles ils mettent d'un côté ce qu'on achète, et de l'autre le plomb. La viande et le poisson se vendent quelquefois à poids égaux. C'est à dire que pour vingt cinq livres de viande on donne 25 livres de plomb. Les légumes et autres articles de peu de valeur se vendent à proportion. On se sert rarement de ce metal pour des fortes sommes."

The expression used by Hunter, Pegu, p. 86, writing in 1785, is "for the payment of smaller sums, they use money of lead, which is weighed in the same manner as the former" (i.e., as silver).<sup>65</sup>

At p. 256 of his Embassy to Ava, Yule further shows how some of the many variations in the statements of writers as to exchange between silver and lead have come about.<sup>66</sup> "Lead is brought from the country about Thein-ni, in the Shân States, some 70 or 80 miles East of Amarapoora. The mines, it is believed, are worked for the silver that is contained in the lead, which pays the expense of smelting and gives a profit. The king [Mindôn Min] last year (1854) purchased 800,000 viss of lead at five tikals for a hundred viss and sold it at twenty tikals." This means that he bought at an exchange of 2,000 to 1 and sold at an exchange of 500 to 1, making a profit of 400 per cent, i.e., if he dealt fairly in the quality of the silver paid out and in, which is doubtful. Yule in calculating his profits (same page) at 120,000 tickals on the transaction seems to assume that he did. But the inference of importance for our present purpose from the above quotation is that, in a statement of the relative values between silver and lead by a traveller, a great deal would depend on whether he got his information before or after the lead referred to reached the Royal Treasury, or whether he was writing as to places in or out of the reach of the Royal Monopoly. Thus, for 1786, we get quite a different ratio between lead and silver from any of those above given, out of a statement by Flouest (Toung Pao, Vol. II, p. 41, n. 1), who is writing of Pegu and Rangoon, and says :—"Le plomb vaut 6 bizes [viss] ou 6 bizes et demie pour un tical," i.e., the ratio is from 600 to 650 to 1.

In Stevens' Guide to the East India Trade, ed. 1766, we read, p. 115, of Acheen, that "their Money is in Mace and Cash; the Mace is a gold Coin, about the size of a Two-penny Piece, but thinner, weighing about nine Grains; the Cash is a small Piece of Lead, 2500 of which usually pass for a Mace." On the same page we read :—"8 Mace Acheen make 1 Pagoda Madras." So one mace must have been nearly half a tical. This gives us a ratio roughly of 1,000 to 1 between silver and lead, or pretty nearly that of Burma. The trouble in the calculation, and no doubt also the reason for the great variation in the relative values above stated, is, as Stevens says, that "the Achineers do so adulterate the Coin."<sup>67</sup>

<sup>65</sup> As to what commercial writers of Hunter's time meant by "bullion, coin and money," we have a very instructive note in Stevens, Guide to East India Trade, ed. 1775, p. 93, where he quotes Sir James Steuart's Principles of Money, 1772, to the following effect :—"By bullion, we understand silver or gold, the mass or weight of which is not determined, though the fineness may be known by a particular stamp . . . . By coin we understand pieces of gold or silver of determinate weights and fineness . . . . By money we understand nothing more than the denomination which determines a proportion of value."

In 1889 I procured some bāzār ratios between silver, copper and lead, as current in Mandalay, and, though I do not place complete faith in them, they are interesting and instructive in the present connection. My informant called all the silver ywetnī<sup>68</sup>, but divided it into eight qualities from ywetnī to "ywetnī-50-gē": the lead he called simply kyi, and the copper paissāmbyā, i.e., copper coins, pice. Of the first standard, ywetnī, he says that "it was current in the time of Pagān Min, 1206," i.e., B.E.=A.D. 1844: and of the second, ywetnī-10-gē, that "it was current in the time of Mindōn Min, 1214," B.E., i.e., A.D. 1852. The third standard is ywetnī-15-gē, i.e., 85% of ywetnī, say, 70% of b'ò, and is, from his statement, the current silver of the bāzārs, which cannot, therefore, be much better than that of Pegu in Hamilton's time.<sup>68</sup>

The above figures indicate considerable laxity in estimating ratios in so gross a form of currency as lead, and the following example as to how bāzār dealers work out "change" in lead, given me by the same informant, shows it further:—

Ex:—A man goes to the bāzār to buy oil: he has 1 m̄ weight of silver: 12 *ywē*s = 1 m̄. He buys 8 *ywē*s worth of oil. The bāzār dealer has no change in silver for the 4 *ywē*s due to him. Two viss 50 tickals of lead = 1 m̄ (= 2½ m̄ = ½ tickal). The bāzār dealer must therefore give in exchange 31 tickals, 4 pēs of lead, which is the equivalent of 4 *ywē*s of silver.

The sum is however worked out wrongly. Thus:—

(a) 4 ywē = 1/3 m̄ = 1/3 × 1/10 tickal = 1.30 tickal.

(b) 1 tickal silver = 250 × 4 = 1,000 tickals lead.

(c) Therefore, 4 ywē silver = 1,000 by 30 tickals lead = 33 tickals, 3 m̄, 4 ywē lead.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF CHĀLUKYA VIKRAMĀDITYA.

PART I.—INTRODUCTORY: VIKRAMĀDITYA'S ANCESTRY.

The name 'Chālukya' and its variants.

The Chālukyas are variously known in inscriptions as 'Chanjukyas', 'Chaulukyas', 'Chalukyas', 'Chalukyas', 'Chalukyas', 'Chalukyas', 'Chalukyas', and Bilhāṇa<sup>1</sup> calls them in addition 'Chujukyas' or 'Chulukyas'. In Guzerāt they are more commonly known as the Solāṅkis or 'Solakis'.

The Chālukyas and their modern representatives.

They are at present represented by the Solāṅkis in Rajputāna, by the Chālkes and the Sālūkes, in the Marāṭhi-speaking districts and by the Chalhaks in Bihār.<sup>2</sup>

The mythical origin of the Chālukyas.

The legendary origin of the Chālukyas, according to Bilhāṇa,<sup>3</sup> is as follows:—Brahma was once engaged in his Sandhya devotions when Indra came to him to complain of the growing godlessness on earth and requested him to create a hero that would be a terror to the wrong-doers. He then directed his eyes to the 'chuḷuka', i.e., the hand hollowed for the reception of water in the course of devotional exercise, and from it sprang a mighty warrior whose descendants were known as the Chālukyas. A somewhat similar account is also to be found in the Handārki inscription<sup>4</sup> of about the same date as that of Bilhāṇa's work. Another version,<sup>5</sup> slightly different in its details, is that the Chālukyas were the descendants of one sprung from the 'chuḷuka' of Drōṇa when he was once ready to curse Drupada of Pāñchāla for having insulted him. Elsewhere<sup>6</sup> they are said to have sprung from the chuḷuka of the northern sage Hārītī Pāñchāsika. These accounts represent merely the tradition that was current about the origin of the Chālukyas and clearly betray by their variance an effort on the part of their authors to trace the origin to a mythical ancestor born of 'chuḷuka'—an origin suggested by the name itself.

Their original stock.

In Prithvirājardas<sup>7</sup> of Chand Bardai we are told that the Chālukyas were the descendants of the Agnikulas, but as there is not a single epigraphic record<sup>8</sup> in which their origin from the fire-altar is even hinted at and as the statement stands almost alone unsupported by any other literary work,<sup>9</sup> it cannot be taken seriously.

<sup>9</sup> Pandit M. Raghavayyengar has included the Chālukyas among the Vāḷir kings (vide infra 113). In Purāṇānīru, verse 201, Irungōvī is mentioned as one of the forty-nine Vāḷir kings sprung from the 'Taḍavu' or 'தடவு' of the northern sage. The stanza runs as follows:—'தடவச் முனிவர் தடவினுட் டோன்றி . . . . . ஈத்பத் தொன்பது வழி முறை வந்த வேளிஞ்சு மேரே.' The learned commentator of the Purāṇānīru interprets the word 'தடவு' as śoma kuṇḍa or fire-pot. If the above meaning be accepted the Agnikula theory of the origin of the Chālukyas would appear to derive some support from the Purāṇānīru. But Pandit M. Raghavayyengar has taken it to mean the sacrificial pot to suit the traditional origin of the Chālukyas (Vāḷirvāralīru, 12). May not the word itself be taken as the Tamil equivalent of Sanskrit ('chuḷuka') (hollow palm) so as to best fit in with the several etiological stories regarding the origin of the Chālukyas? Tolteppia vaṭra 'தடவென் இசை கோட்டமுஞ்செய்யும்' (உரிச்சொல்லியல் 23) would appear to lend support to the above interpretation put on the word.

Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar<sup>10</sup> is of opinion that the Châlukyas constitute a foreign element in the Hindu population and that they are a second Rajput tribe of Gujar origin. There is no doubt, he says, that Gujarât (a corrupt form of Gurjaratrâ but not of Gurjara-râshtra) of the Bombay Presidency known for a long time as Lâta<sup>11</sup> bore the new name only after the Châlukyas had conquered and occupied it. But as he himself admits that there is no epigraphic evidence in support of his assertion, it is too much to infer for certain the race of a people merely from the name of the province they occupied.

Mr. M. Raghavayyengar<sup>12</sup> has classed the Châlukyas under the Vêjir community which would appear to have once held large sway in the Dekkan. He has based his conclusion on certain Tamil classics<sup>13</sup> and later Chôla inscriptions.<sup>14</sup> He would also point in support of his statement to several towns in India beginning with Vêj or its corrupted forms, such as Bêlhuji, Bêla, Belgâum, Vêjâpur, etc.

The Châlukyas themselves, as is seen in records, both literary and inscriptional,<sup>15</sup> (a) claim to belong to the lunar race, Mânava gôtra and call themselves the descendants of Hâriti and the ornaments of the race of Satyâsraya. Perhaps historically it is not possible at this distance of time to state more definitely who they were and to what stock they belonged.

Their original abode and early migrations.

Nor is it possible to trace step by step, except in broad outline, when and whence they came to the Dekkan. Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar<sup>16</sup> has shown that their original habitat in India was Ahichchatra, the capital of the old Sapâdalaksha country in the Sawalâkh (Sîwâlik) mountains in the north. Bilhapa<sup>16</sup> states that they first ruled at Ayôdhyâ and that, desirous of further conquest, they went south. The Mirâj<sup>17</sup> and Kauthem<sup>18</sup> grants and the Yêvûr<sup>19</sup> tablet confirm the same with some greater detail:—"One less than sixty ruled at Ayôdhyâ; after that, sixteen kings born in that lineage ruled the country that includes the region of the south"—evidently not the Dekkan but the Gâûgetic valley south of Ayôdhyâ. Hence all that can be said with some certainty about their migrations is that they came from the north.

The early Châlukyas.

The first historically famous prince of the early Châlukyas was Satyâsraya Sri Pulakêsi Vallabha Mahârâja, who crossed the Narmadâ and made Vâtâpûra (modern Bâdâmi in the Kalâjgi district of the Nizâm's dominions) their capital. The fortunes of the family reached their zenith in the days of his grandson Pulakêsi II (A.D. 609 to A.D. 642). He crushed the power of the Pallavas in the south and was undoubtedly the greatest king of the early Châlukyas. He performed an âśvamedha or horse-sacrifice and became the paramount sovereign of the Dekkan as far as the Narmadâ, beyond which lay the dominions of Śilāditya or Harshavardhana of Kānya-kubja (modern Kanauj), the lord-paramount of all Northern India. It was about this time that Yūan Chwāng, the Chinese Buddhist pilgrim, visited India and stayed long in Harsha's court. He too testifies to the valour of the Chālukyas and records that they alone did not submit to Śilāditya but beat back his invasion and effectually prevented him from extending his dominions to the south. It was during the same reign that Kubja-Vishṇuvardhana, a brother of Pulakēśi II, led an expedition to Vēṅgi between the Gôdâvari and the Kṛishṇâ and became the founder of another branch of the Chālukyas, now known as the Eastern. More than a century later, the fortunes of the family were impeded in the time of Kirtivarman II about A.D. 757, when Dantidurga of the Râshtrakûṭa race vanquished him and wrested the sovereignty from him.

The Râshtrakûṭas.

The Râshtrakûṭas continued to be the sovereign rulers of the country for nearly two centuries and a quarter from A.D. 748 to A.D. 973. All this time the Chālukyas undoubtedly held a subordinate position under them as their feudatories<sup>20</sup> and were divided into many branches.

The later Chālukyas.

During the time of Khôṭika, the thirteenth of the Râshtrakûṭas, Sri Harsha alias Siyaka, the Paramâra king of Mâlava, invaded his dominions, looted his capital Mānyakhêṭa (Mālkhêḍ in the Nizâm's dominions) in A.D. 972<sup>21</sup> and thus weakened the power of the Râshtrakûṭas. Immediately after, Khôṭika died and was succeeded by his nephew Karkara or Kakkala. It was then that the feudatory Chālukyas, headed by Tailapa, whose father seems to have remained near Mysore, seized the opportunity and restored the glory of the house by overcoming<sup>22</sup> Kakkala and Raṣastambha<sup>23</sup> in battle some time after 24th June, A.D. 973.

Relation between the early and later Chālukyas.

Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar<sup>24</sup> is of opinion that the main branch of the early Chālukyas became extinct after Kirtivarman II, but that several minor offshoots continued as feudatories of the Râshtrakûṭas and that one of these in the person of Tailapa restored the fortunes of the Chālukyas. He also asserts that the later Chālukyas were not a continuation of the earlier and that Tailapa belonged to quite a collateral and unimportant branch. His reasons are (1) "the princes of the earlier dynasty always traced their descent to Hâriti and spoke of themselves as belonging to the Manavya gôtra, while these later Chālukyas traced their pedigree to Satyâśraya only and those two names do not occur in their inscriptions except in the Mirâj grant and its copies where an effort is made to begin at the beginning"; (2) "the titles Jagadêkamalla, Tribhuvanamalla, etc., which the later Chālukyas assumed mark them off distinctively from the princes of the earlier dynasty which had none like them."

<sup>23</sup> Ind. Ant., VIII, 15. Yēvûr tablet. Here 'Raṣastambha' must be the name of a person, son or relative of Karkara and cannot be 'a pillar of war' or the name of a place, as has been construed by Meesrs. Fleet and Elliot respectively. Mr. Fleet's translation of the verse in the Kauthem grant needs modification. The correct rendering would be "Easily chopped off on the field of battle Karkara and Raṣastambha, the two sprouts of the creeper of Râshtrakûṭa Râjyalakshmi, who were as it were the two feet of Kali triumphantly roaming about in person—wicked, strong of body and the sprouts of the tree of disrespectfulness to elders." Vide Epi. Ind., IV, add. p. v.

With reference to the first argument it may be observed that every one of the early Châlukya kings had the biruda Satyâśraya or 'refuge of truth' from Pulakêśi I down to Kirtivarman II with the only exceptions of Kirtivarman I and Maṅgalêśa.<sup>25</sup> From the Châlukyan genealogy of the Kannaḍa poet Raṇṇa<sup>26</sup> it is evident that the early Châlukyas had a progenitor in Satyâśraya who was the first to rule at Ayôdhyâ. The Ittagi inscription<sup>27</sup> informs us in addition that the family was therefore known as Satyâśrayakula and states definitely that this Satyâśraya was himself in turn descended from the sons of Hârîṭ. As regards the second argument of Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar it must be pointed out that, besides some birudas common to the later as well as the earlier branches, such as Malârajâdhirâja, Paramêśwara, Bhaṭṭâraka, Paramabhaṭṭâraka and Pithvivallabha, we find some later kings of the early dynasty such as Vikramâditya I and Vinayâditya had even the birudas Rajamalla and Yuddhamalla,<sup>28</sup> thus indicating a leaning to 'malla' title, so familiar among the later Châlukyas. Albeit, one is inclined to think that to argue continuity or otherwise from birudas, which so much depend on the caprice and desire for novelty among individual monarchs, seems to be treading on doubtful and even dangerous grounds.<sup>29</sup> Thus it will be seen that Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar's reasons for the assertion that the later Châlukyas were not a continuation of the earlier are not conclusive enough and that there is nothing to discredit the continuity of the two lines mentioned in the Mirâj, Kauthem and Yêvûr records where the Châlukya genealogy is given in full.

The political outlook of the Dekkan at the close of the tenth century.

The last quarter of the tenth century witnessed a revolution in the mutual relations of powers contending for supremacy in the Dekkan. Everywhere the old combatants receded to the background and their places were slowly and steadily taken up by new ones. 'The old order changed, yielding place to the new.' In the Dekkan the Râshtrakûṭas disappeared from history. The way for their decline was paved, as was seen above, by Śrî Harsha, the Paramâra king of Mâlava, and the feudatory Châlukyas, under the leadership of Tailapa, seized the opportunity, extinguished their power and stepped in much to the chagrin of the Paramâras. In the further south the Pallavas of Kâñchi had been thrown out of their foremost place and the Chôlas were already rising rapidly on their ruins. The latter also interfered successfully in the affairs of the Eastern Châlukya dominions of Vêrṅgi which was then broken by internal dissensions and a long period of anarchy and interregnum<sup>30</sup> and would appear to have wrested a part of their dominions from even the Gaṅgas of Talakâṇḍ in Mysore. This revolution contained in itself the germs of future hostility between the rising powers and it must have been clear to keen-sighted politicians that in the place of the old rivalries between the Râshtrakûṭas, Mâlavas and Pallavas in the ninth and tenth centuries, the later Châlukyas would have to contend long and hard with the Chôlas in the south and the Paramâras in the north.

Tailapa (A.D. 973-997).

Tailapa calls himself<sup>31</sup> as the truly valorous king, terrifier of the Karahâta and Koṭṭaka kings, poison to the Râshtrakûṭas, fever to the Gârjaras, and a consuming fire to the Mâlavas.

As for his relations with the Paramāras of Mājava it is claimed for Vākpati Muñja, the uncle of the celebrated Bhōja, that he defeated Tailapa six times.<sup>31</sup> This indicates prolonged hostility between them, at the end of which it would appear that Muñja crossed the Gōdāvarī, marched aggressively against Tailapa, was taken captive and executed<sup>32</sup> by the latter after a vain attempt at escape sometime between A.D. 993 and 997.<sup>33</sup> That even as early as Tailapa's rule hostility between the Chōlas and the Chālukyas showed itself is hinted at in some inscriptions,<sup>34</sup> though details are not forthcoming.

It is somewhat difficult to determine exactly the extent of Tailapa's dominions. Some records<sup>35</sup> of his time mention definitely the Rāṭṭas of Saundatti and the rulers of Banavāse, Sāntalige and Kisukāḍ territorica as his feudatories. It is just possible that the Silāhāras of Koṭkaṇḍ and the Yādavas of Sēṇadēsa also accepted him as their overlord. His kingdom certainly included the whole of the southern part of the Rāshtrakūṭa dominions and might have extended into the northern part as well. Lāṭa (southern Gujarāt) was also under his control, for its lord Bārappa was sent by him against Mūlarāja, the founder of the Anahilwād dynasty in Gujarāt.<sup>37</sup> He is also spoken of as the lord of Thiliṅga and Karṇāṭa<sup>38</sup> and his kingdom included the whole of the Karṇāṭa country.

Nothing is definitely known about the capital of his vast possessions. Vātāpīpura was made the capital of the early Chālukyas by Pulakēśi I. During the Rāshtrakūṭa sovereignty Mānyakhēṭa (Mālkhēḍ<sup>39</sup> in the Nizām's dominions) became the capital in the time of Sārva or Amōgavaraha I.<sup>40</sup> Hence there need be no surprise if the same continued<sup>41</sup> as capital even under Tailapa who was so much the political heir of the Rāshtrakūṭas, as is shown by his marriage<sup>42</sup> of Jākavvā, the daughter of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Brahma.

Satyāśraya (A.D. 997-1008).

Tailapa was succeeded by his son Satyāśraya who is said to have ruled over the whole of Raṭṭapāḍi.<sup>43</sup> In his time the danger from the neighbouring Chōlas became thicker, as can be inferred from the two invasions<sup>44</sup> of Raṭṭapāḍi seven and a half lakh country by Rājarāja the Great, in one of which he conquered Gaṅgapāḍi and Nōḷambapāḍi,<sup>45</sup> the bulk of modern Mysore.

Vikramâditya V (A.D. 1009-1014) <sup>45</sup> and Ayyaṇa II (A.D. 1014).

Satyâśraya, dying childless, was succeeded by his nephews Vikramâditya, Ayyaṇa and Jayasimha. The first two seem to have ruled but for a few years and nothing historical is known of them.

Jayasimha (A.D. 1015-1042).

Jayasimha calls himself in the Balagâmve inscription of A.D. 1019 <sup>46</sup> 'a lion to the elephant Râjêndrachôja' and he is said to have 'again and again immersed the Chêra and the Chôja in the ocean.' The Chôja inscriptions <sup>47</sup> inform us that Râjêndrachôja, the son and successor of Râjarâja the Great, conquered from Jayasimha, Edatore, Banavâse and Kollippâk and a few other towns in Raṣṭrapâḍi. 'As both Jayasimha and Râjêndrachôja boast of having conquered each other, the success was probably on both sides alternately or neither of them obtained any lasting advantage.' As for Paramâra relations it is narrated in Bhôjacharita <sup>48</sup> that, after Bhôja had come of age and begun to administer the affairs of his kingdom, on one occasion a play representing the fate of Muṇja was acted before him and he thereupon resolved to avenge his uncle's death. He invaded the Dekkan with a large army, captured Tailapa, subjected him to the same indignities to which Muṇja had been subjected by him and finally executed him. But Bhôja who was certainly dead in or before A.D. 1055 <sup>49</sup> and who ruled over Mâlava for a long period of 55 years according to Bhôjacharita must have ascended over the throne only about A.D. 1000 and so could not have wreaked his vengeance on Tailapa as recorded in Bhôjacharita. <sup>50</sup> The tradition recorded there, however, might have some kernel of truth in it. The brutal murder of the uncle Muṇja by Tailapa between A.D. 995 to A.D. 997 would have sunk deep in the mind of his nephew Bhôja who was then a mere boy. As soon as he took the reins of Government in his own hands his first thought was to right the wrong inflicted and to retrieve the honour of the family. So he formed a confederacy, invaded the Châlukya dominions, vanquished the Karnâṭas <sup>51</sup> and might have killed, not Tailapa, but some one of his immediate successors. Who then was the Châlukya king that became the victim of Bhôja's revenge? An inscription of A.D. 1019 of Jayasimha calls him 'the moon to the lotus king Bhôja' <sup>52</sup> (i.e., the one that humbled Bhôja as the moon causes the lotus to close its eyes) and details that Jayasimha 'searched out, beset, pursued, ground down and put to flight the confederacy of Mâlava.' The vindictive tone of the inscription leads one to infer that Bhôja must have inflicted some crushing

Sômēwara I or Āhavamalla (A.D. 1042-1068).

Jayasimha ceased to reign about A.D. 1042 and his son Sômēwara who is better known as Āhavamalla<sup>55</sup> (the wrestler in war) succeeded him. It was during his reign that Kalyāṇ (about 100 miles west by north of Hyderābad in the Nizām's dominions) was made the capital of the Chālukya dominions, perhaps because of its central position and strategic importance. The first epigraphic mention of it is in an inscription<sup>56</sup> of the year A.D. 1053 wherein it is called the 'nelevidu'<sup>57</sup> (= cantonment or a fixed, permanent or standing camp). As has been pointed out by Mr. Fleet<sup>58</sup> the town is not mentioned in any of the numerous grants of the early Chālukyas, Rāshtrakūṭas or the later Chālukyas till the time of Āhavamalla. The question naturally arises whether it owed its very existence and foundation to Āhavamalla or whether he merely developed it into a capital. Bilhara notices it in a verse<sup>59</sup> which lends support either <sup>60</sup> way. It is probable that it existed as an insignificant town from very remote times and that Âhavamalla beautified and enlarged it to make it the capital of his vast dominions.

<sup>54</sup> Pandit. Ojha thinks that it was Jayasimha but not Vikramāditya V who was slain by Bhōja (Hist. of the Solankis). He bases his conclusion on some verses (canto I, verses 88 and 91-6) in Bilhara's Vikramāṅkadēvacharita, one of which (v. 86) when translated runs thus:—"Filling the whole of Swarga with the fame of his victories Jayasimha received a garland of flowers culled from the Pārijāta tree from Indra's own hands." Then follow the verses about Jayasimha's son and successor Āhavamalla, who in one of his early exploits is said to have sacked Dhārā from which Bhōja had to flee and this event is made much of by Bilhara who celebrates it in some five or six verses. Inferring from the verse translated above that Jayasimha died 'on the field of battle' Pandit Ojha construes the early exploit of Āhavamalla to have been undertaken to avenge the death of his father on the battlefield. But the verse referred to does not lend support to the Pandit's inference that Jayasimha died 'on the field of battle.' According to the Hindu mythology it is usually the Apsārās and not Indra that are said to garland those who die on the battle-field. Indra's garlanding Jayasimha was but an act of recognition on his part of the meritorious deeds of Jayasimha. Such a recognition is met with elsewhere in Sanskrit and Tamil literature, e.g., Kālidāsa's Śātuntala (VII, 2), Purāṇānūru, 241. Moreover it is usual with oriental poets to use such periphrastic and euphemistic expressions as 'went to the world of Indra,' 'messengers of Indra were sent to call one to the skies, etc., whenever they wish to say that a man died (Bilhara's Vik. charita, IV, VI; Epi. Ind., II, 29; Nāgpur stone inscription, Epi. Ind., II, v. 32). Hence all that can be inferred from the verse is that Jayasimha died—but not necessarily on the battlefield—and was duly honoured by Indra for his valorous deeds. The sack of Dhārā by Āhavamalla was due, as in the parallel case of Āhavamalla's going against the Chōlas, to the traditional hostility between the Chālukyas and the Paramāras; and Bilhara celebrates it as the greatest achievement of Āhavamalla, as Bhōja was an illustrious and powerful ruler of the north and Dhārā was an impregnable fortress. Thus Bilhara's verses on which Pandit Ojha relies do not warrant his conclusion. More so over the murder of Vikramāditya or Ayyana II as early as A.D. 1014 or thereabouts rather than of Jayasimha so late as A.D. 1042 would better accord with the impatience of Bhōja recorded in Bhōjacharita, considering that Bhōja should certainly have come of age in A.D. 1014 and begun to administer the affairs of the kingdom himself.

<sup>55</sup> Bilhara always calls him as 'Āhavamalla' and never as 'Sômēwara'—not because, as Dr. Bühler insinuates, that he did not like to call the father to whom Vikrama was much attached by the same name as that of Vikrama's hated brother and predecessor, but because he was pre-eminently the Āhavamalla or 'wrestler in war' of the times and is known only as such in almost all the Chōla records and most of the Chālukya inscriptions.

Bilhana <sup>61</sup> tells us that, as usual with the Châlukya princes, he first marched against the king of the Chôlas and defeated him; stormed Dhârâ, the capital of the Mâlava king Bhôja who was forced to abandon the same; destroyed the kingdom of Dâhalâ (Chêdi) and utterly vanquished <sup>62</sup> its ruler Karṇa; planted a triumphal column on the sea-shore; defeated the king of the Draviḍas who had run to encounter him; stormed Kâñchi, the capital of the Chôlas and drove its ruler into the jungles. The inscriptions <sup>63</sup> generally confirm Bilhana's statements and occasionally supplement them with further details. The Chôla contemporaries of Chalukki Âhavamalla were Râjâdhirâja (A.D. 1018 to 1053), Râjêndradêva (A.D. 1052 to 1063) and Virarâjêndra (A.D. 1063 to 1070, circa), the three illustrious successors of Râjêndrachôla, the opponent of Jayasimha. The 29th year inscription <sup>64</sup> of Râjâdhirâja dated A.D. 1047 records a victorious war against Âhavamalla. The Chôlas followed up this success, set fire to Kollippâk (42 miles from Secunderâbad in the Nizâm's dominions) one of the capitals of Jayasimha, destroyed the gardens and the palace of the Chalukki at Kampli (a minor capital of the Châlukyas and a town in Hospet Taluk, Bellâry district), planted a pillar of victory there and vanquished the Kalyâṇs. <sup>65</sup> Not content with inflicting these disasters on the frontier of the Châlukya dominions, the Chôla brothers, Râjâdhirâja, the elder and reigning sovereign, and Râjêndradêva, the younger and his associate, conjointly penetrated aggressively far into the interior of Raṭṭamaṇḍalam (Raṭṭapâḍi), seized Kalyâṇ <sup>66</sup> and planted a pillar of victory at Kolhâpur (in the Nizâm's dominions). The chivalrous Âhavamalla, righteously indignant at these inroads, invited them to battle at holy Koppa on the bank of the great river—the Kṛishṇâ. <sup>67</sup> There in A.D. 1052-4 <sup>68</sup> was * Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar takes the word परत्तिष्ठ 'most excellent' attributively rather than predicatively, but the arrangement of the words in the line favours the latter construction, which enhances its elegance. The line when translated would run thus:—

'He (the king) made the city named Kalyâṇ most excellent.'

† Vik. charita, I.

‡ The word विशृण means literally 'withered'. Karṇa's predecessor died in A.D. 1040, Benâres copperplate inscription of Karṇadêva is dated in A.D. 1042 (Epi. Ind., II, 303). So Karṇa must have ascended the throne about A.D. 1040, more or less contemporaneous with Âhavamalla. An inscription of Karṇa's son is dated 81 years later in A.D. 1121. Kirtivarman the Chandêlla (A.D. 109) claims to have defeated Karṇa; Hémachandra eulogises Bhîmadêva I of Gujarât (A.D. 1021—1063) for having defeated him. So it is probable that Karṇa reigned for a long time and waged many wars and that his power was severely felt by his neighbours. The word must therefore be taken to mean that he was 'utterly vanquished or defeated,' rather than as translated by Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar that he was 'slain or deposed.'

§ ‘Koppa on the bank of the great river’ must be identified with Koppa on the Kṛishṇâ rather than with Kuppam on the Pâllâr or Kôpal on the Tungabhadra. Epi. Ind., XII, 297. In the Maḡimâḡalam inscription (SII., III, 63, No. 30) Vijayavâḡai (i.e., modern Berwâḡa) is spoken of as the town next to the ‘great river’ thereby implying the Kṛishṇâ. That Koppa was a great pilgrim centre is also evidenced by Yêvâr inscription (Epi. Ind., XII, 279)—SII., III, 60-3 and Epi. Carn., IX, Bn. 108.

¶ The latest verified inscription of Râjâdhirâja is in his 35th year corresponding to May 23rd A.D. 1052 (Epi. Ind., VI). Epi. Carn., Sk. 116, which records the death of the Chôla king on the battle-field is dated Śaka 978, Jaya, Vaiśâkha = May, A.D. 1054. So Koppa must have been fought between May, A.D. 1053 and May, A.D. 1054.

fought one of the most fierce and sanguinary<sup>69</sup> battles that ever took place. Āhavamalla riding on a mast elephant pierced the head of Rājādhirāja with the shower of his straight arrows and slew him.<sup>70</sup> Elated with his success Āhavamalla, not very many years later, undertook a successful expedition to the south against Rājēndradēva. If the latter is identified with 'Vijayarājēndradēva'<sup>71</sup> who fell asleep on the back of the elephant,<sup>72</sup> he would appear to have died<sup>73</sup> in a battle probably with Āhavamalla. Thus it is clear that Āhavamalla prosecuted with great energy the war with the Chōjas bequeathed to him by his predecessors and beat back the advancing tide of the Chōlas who had the audacity to carry fire and sword into the very heart of his dominions.

NUMISMATIC NOTES.

BY K. N. DIKSHIT, M.A.; BANKIPORE

THE coins which have been here described are of exceedingly rare types and were kindly placed at my disposal for the purpose of this article by Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar, M.A., University Professor, Calcutta.

Indo-Greek.

(1) Oval-shaped copper coin of Andragoras:

Size: .85 x .7; wt. 62 grains.

Obv: Head of Alexander the Great r. (as on the coins of Ptolemy I of Egypt).

Rev: Horseman r. with hand extended.

Between horse's feet, monogram  $\Xi<$

This is a unique coin of one of the first Indo-Greek rulers. Only two coins of an Andragoras, one gold and one silver, are known from the British Museum catalogue

யானே நெய்த தஞ்சி யருளிய பெருமான் விஜயராஜேந்திரதேவன்.’

<sup>73</sup> That ‘Tuṣṭiya’ or ‘fell asleep’ is euphemistic for ‘died’ is clear from the note of Mr. V. Kanakasabha Pillai appended to Mahāmahābhārata Swaminatha Ayyar's excellent edition of Purandara.

Now on the authority of Justin, it is known that there were two kings of that name (1) a Persian noble appointed as Satrap of Parthia by Alexander the Great and (2) a Satrap of Parthia overthrown eighty years later by the first Arsaces. Prof. Gardner thought it probable that the two coins in the British Museum belonged to the second of these rulers. The present coin, in my opinion, may safely be assigned to the first, as the occurrence of Alexander the Great's head on the obverse suggests that Andragoras must have at first held the dominions in his charge, as Governor, for the great Macedonian conqueror; exactly in the same way as Ptolemy, holding Egypt in Alexander's name, struck money with the same device as on this coin. The shape of the coin is rather unusual, and perhaps furnishes another proof of its great antiquity.

This coin was originally collected in the Punjab, and is now in the cabinet of the Prince of Wales Museum, Bombay.

Western Kshatrapa.

- (2) Rectangular copper coin of Jayadāman:

Size: .5 x .4.

Obv: Humped bull to r. facing combined trident and battleaxe, within circular border of dots; Greek (?) legend above: ΣΙΤΡΟΣ (perhaps a corruption of ΣΩΗΡΟΣ).

Rev: Chaitya of 10 arches; to l. crescent; to r. disc of the sun; border of dots; Brahmi legend, rajān kshatrapa(sa Svāmi Ja) yadāmana.

This coin, together with Nos. 4 and 5, was found by Mr. Bhandarkar at Hāthab, the ancient Ashtavapra, in the Bhavnagar State, Kathiawar. The type is different from the one described by Prof. Rapson (A. & W. K. Cat. coins No. 265 to 268). The legend on the obverse is different, though equally unintelligible. The obverse die in the present coin has been impressed parallel to the sides, while in the other coins, it was impressed diagonally. The chaitya of 10 arches on the reverse is not known from any other Kshatrapa coins, and must have been imitated from Āndhra coinage.

- (3) Rectangular copper coin of Rudradāman I:

Size: .5 x .45.

Obv: Elephant standing l. within circular dotted border, only partially preserved.

Rev: Chaitya of 3 arches, with crescent above; to l. disc of the sun, to r. crescent;

ma[ha]kshatrapasa sun . . . .

This coin, lately acquired for the Watson Museum of Antiquities, Rajkot, can be attributed almost with certainty to Rudradāman I as it was only this Kshatrapa that called himself 'Mahakshatrapa' and 'Svāmi' on his coins. Together with the next two coins, it brings to light, for the first time, the copper currency of the mighty Satrap Rudradāman I. It is just probable that the copper coinage of this Satrap was issued only in small quantities in the earlier part of his reign and was soon discontinued altogether.

- (4) Rectangular copper coin of Rudradāman I:

Obv: Elephant standing.

Rājān Mahakshatrapasa [S]v(ami) [Rudradāma]sa.

This coin is somewhat similar to coin (3) but is much lighter, has on the reverse the positions of the sun and moon reversed, and shows later forms of some letters in the Brāhmī legend, e.g. sa. The form of the sun is also distinctly 'rayed' here, while in coin (3) it is a simple disc. This shows that coin (3) was issued at an earlier date.

(5) Square copper coin of Rudradāman I:

Size: .5; wt. 29 grs.

Obv: Humped bull facing, within circular border of dates; Brāhmī legend:

Sv(ā)m(i) Rudradāmasya.

Rev: Traces of Chaitya of three arches, with 'rayed sun' to l. and wavy line below, as usual. Illegible legend; 18-8 Δ

The legend on the reverse might possibly be Brāhmī, but nothing can be definitely said about it. Two coins of the 'facing bull' type, but containing no legend, were rightly conjectured by Prof. Rapson to belong to the period Saka 70 to Saka 125. (A. & W. K. Cat., Pl. XII; coins 326-7.) They appear to be heavier and more regular in shape than the present coin, and must be slightly later in date (circa 70 to 90 Saka).

There are certain features common to all these coins of Mahākshatrapa Rudradāman. They are all rectangular, almost square in shape, with the devices diagonally impressed upon them. They all give the title Svāmi, which is not found on the silver coins of Rudradāman. They all come from Kathiawar. The decayed condition of the specimens makes it difficult to determine their metrology.

Muhammadian (Gujarat Sultans).

(6) Circular silver coin of Muzaffar II, Sultan of Gujarat (A.D. 1511-1525).

Size: .75; wt. 109 grains. Mint: Mustafābād; date [932 A.H.] = [A.D. 1525-6].

Obv: within peaked square:

مظفر شاه
خدا دالام ملكه

Outside square, near circular border

Below: شهر
Right: اعظم
Above: مصطفى

Rev: within circular border

(7) Same as (6), but date (936 A.H.) = (A.D. 1519-20) which is reversed through mistake.

The coins (6) and (7) belong to a treasure trove found in the Jambughoda State, Rewakantha Agency, Bombay Presidency, which was sent to Mr. Bhandarkar for examination. They represent a hitherto unpublished type, and clearly show that the Mustafābād or Girnar mint did not cease after the reign of Mahmud Begara, but continued at least till the end of the reign of his son and successor, Muzaffar II. There are four more undated coins of this type in the above-mentioned hoard, and I have since seen one more in the possession of the late Mr. Framji J. Thanewala, of Bombay.

IS KALKIRĀJA AN HISTORICAL PERSONAGE ?

By PROF. H. B. BHIDE, M.A., LL.B.; BHAVNAGAR.

JAIN authors have referred to a Kalkirāja who according to some of them flourished about 1000 years after the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvira, and during whose reign Jain saints suffered persecution at his hands. Mr. Jayaswal and Mr. Pathak have called in aid this tradition while formulating their respective theories which are now known to the readers of this Journal. Their theories are quite different and I am not directly concerned with them at present. My immediate purpose is to show that the Jain tradition is not trustworthy from the point of view of history and that consequently their theories are weakened in so far as they are based upon it.

I first deal with Mr. Jayaswal's argument. He relies mainly upon Jinasena, the author of the Hari-vamśa. He says that Jinasena's date for Kalkirāja is presumably correct as he was removed from Kalkirāja by less than 300 years. Now if Jinasena's statements are to be taken as correct, we shall find on scrutinising them that they do not substantiate the conclusion at which Mr. Jayaswal arrives. The chronology as given by Jinasena is this :

Pālaka	..	..	..	..	..	60	years.
Vijaya Kings	..	..	..	..	..	155	..
The Purūḍhas	..	..	..	..	..	40	..
Pushpamitra	..	..	..	..	..	30	..
Vasumitra and Agnimitra	..	..	..	..	..	60	..
Rāsabha Kings	..	..	..	..	..	100	..
Naravāhana	..	..	..	..	..	42	..
The Bāṇa Kings	..	..	..	..	..	240	..
The Gupta Kings	..	..	..	..	..	231	..
Kalkirāja	..	..	..	..	..	42	..
Total						1000	years.

This shows that the 42 years of the reign of Kalkirāja were the concluding years of the 1000-year period which elapsed after the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvira; that is, we must suppose Kalkirāja to have died in A.D. 473 or A.D. 455 according as we assign the date 527 B.C. or 545 B.C. to Mahāvira's Nirvāṇa. In either case the date is too early for Yaśodharman of Mālava with whom Mr. Jayaswal wants Kalkirāja to be identified. If we are to rely on Jinasena, we cannot then assert that Kalkirāja began to reign in A.D. 473 as Mr. Jayaswal seems to do. As a fact, however, I hope to show that the Jain traditions regarding Kalkirāja are conflicting and therefore possess no historical importance.

Mr. Pathak attempts to determine the initial date of the Gupta era with the help of Jain authors only. He proposes to identify Mihirakula with Kalkirāja, mentioned by Jinasena, Guṇabhadra and Nemichandra, and then to prove that the Gupta era commenced in the year 242 of the Śaka era. I have no quarrel with him as regards the conclusion which can be proved on other grounds; I only wish to point out that the authorities he has put forward are not only in themselves insufficient to prove his case, but are of an extremely doubtful character. I should like to bring to the notice of scholars, (1) that some of Mr. Pathak's arguments are vitiated by serious flaws in reasoning; (2) that the three Jain authors from whose works he quotes give us conflicting and therefore untrustworthy accounts; and (3) that there are certain other Jain writers who give for Kalkirāja a date which is removed by centuries from the one given by Jinasena, Guṇabhadra and Nemichandra.

Before considering the question of the starting point of the Gupta era, Mr. Pathak incidentally tries to justify the identification of the Mālava era with the Vikrama era. The identification may or may not be right; but Mr. Pathak's mode of its justification is wrong. He says that according to Jinasena Kalkirāja was born in 394 of Śaka era expired. (As I have shown above, Jinasena does not say so; but for the sake of argument I allow the statement.) The year 394 of the Śaka era roughly corresponds to the year 529 of the Vikrama era. The date of the Mandasor inscription of Bandhuvarman is 529 of the Mālava era. Hence Mr. Pathak concludes 'that the Mālava era is the same as the Vikrama era of 57 B.C.' This is strange reasoning. There is no earthly connection between the birth of Kalkirāja and the inscription of Bandhuvarman. Mere identity of two dates will not mean that they are to be referred to one and the same era. One illustration will make my point clear. The Indian Mutiny occurred in A.D. 1857, which date corresponds to 1914 of the Vikrama era. The present great European war broke out in A.D. 1914. Now suppose a historian 2000 years hence comes across two statements, one to the effect that the Indian Mutiny broke out in 1914 of the Vikrama era, and the other to the effect that a great European war commenced in A.D. 1914, will he be justified in saying that the Vikrama era is the same as the Christian era? Similarly in the present instance we find Kalkirāja said to have been born in 529 of the Vikrama era and a temple repaired in 529 of the Mālava era; surely this is no ground for saying that the two eras are identical.

A similar line of questionable reasoning is adopted in proving that the Śaka year 394 expired was the Gupta year 153 expired. Mr. Pathak found in the Khoh grant of Parivrajaka Mahārāja Hastin that the Gupta year 156 expired<sup>1</sup> was the Mahā-Vaiśākha year of the Jovian cycle. Calculating backwards we get the Gupta year 153 to be the Mahā-Māgha year of the same cycle. Now according to Jinasena and Guṇabhadra (as he says) Kalkirāja was born in Śaka 394 expired; and Guṇabhadra further adds that it was the Mahā-Māgha year. Combining these two results Mr. Pathak says that the Śaka year 394 corresponds to the Gupta year 153. This is not quite logical. Two years cannot be supposed to be identical merely because they happen to be the Mahā-Māgha years. The Gupta year 165 was also the Mahā-Māgha year; so also the Gupta year 141. If the grant of Hastin had been dated 12 years later or earlier the same result would have followed. The grant has nothing to do with the birth of Kalkirāja. The grant might well have been made three years after one Mahā-Māgha year, while the birth of Kalkirāja might have occurred in quite another Mahā-Māgha year, removed perhaps by several decades or centuries from the first. When we thus see the unsoundness of the argument, there exists then no room for his conclusion that the Gupta era commenced in Śaka 241 expired.

Now let us turn to the Jain authors on whom Mr. Pathak relies for his theory. The authors are three—Jinasena, author of the Hari-vamśa, Guṇabhadra of the Uttara-purāṇa, and Nemichandra of the Trilokasāra. Of these Guṇabhadra and Nemichandra say that Kalkirāja was born 1000 years after the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvira. What Jinasena has to say on the point is not quite clear from quotations as adduced by Mr. Pathak. Verse 352 quoted by him says that the Śaka king there will arise (presumably, will commence to reign) when 605 years and 5 months expire after Vira-Nirvāṇa. Verses 487 and 488 quoted by him give us 231 years as the period of the Gupta kings, and 42 years of Kalkirāja. Mr. Pathak quotes no other verse from Jinasena. There seems to be no clear connection between v. 552 and vv. 487 and 488. As they stand here they do not explain whether the 42 years of the reign of Kalkirāja are to be taken as the ending years of the 1000-year period or whether they are to be excluded from it and we are to suppose that Kalkirāja was born after the expiry of that period. Jinasena's verses are given mutilated and without context. Mr. Pathak combines the mutilated statement of Jinasena with that of Guṇabhadra and concludes 'that according to Jinasena and Guṇabhadra Kalkirāja was born when 394 years and 7 months had passed away from the birth of the Śaka nīg.' There are two mistakes in this assertion. First Jinasena does not say, as I have shown above, that Kalkirāja was born when 1000 years passed after Vira-Nirvāṇa; according to him Kalkirāja's years complete that traditional period among the Jains. Mr. Pathak may have overlooked the four verses just preceding v. 487 and consequently fallen into the error. Otherwise he would not have said that Jinasena's date for Kalkirāja agrees with that of Guṇabhadra and Nemichandra. According to Jinasena Kalkirāja died in 1000 of the Vira-Nirvāṇa era while according to the other two authors, Kalkirāja was born in 1001 of the same era. This means a difference of 70 years in dates—if we suppose that according to all the three writers Kalkirāja lived for 70 years. Secondly, सकस्यस्तनाभवन् does not mean 'The Saka king was born' but 'the Saka king began to reign.' It is not known that the Saka era was inaugurated in celebration of the birth of a Saka king. But this is a minor point.

It will thus be seen that of the three authorities of Mr. Pathak, one who is the oldest of the three contradicts the other two. Therefore, their statements are deprived of much of their value and must be utilised with caution.

The three authors referred to by Mr. Pathak belong to the Digambara sect of the Jains. There are certain other Digambara writers who have a slightly different account to give of Kalkirāja. Guṇabhadra says that Kalkirāja was the son of Śiśupāla and Prithvisundari; but Trilokya-prajñapti, a Digambara work written about A.D. 1200, says that he was the son of Indra.*

The Trilokya-prajñapti notes two somewhat varying chronologies covering the 1000-year period after the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvira. There is a slight difference between the two; but the important point to be noted is that neither of them states that Kalkirāja was born in 1001 after Nirvāṇa. I may quote the verses here:—

It is also very interesting to note the various dates of the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvīra recorded as traditionally current in this work. According to one account, the Nirvāṇa occurred 461 years before the Śaka era ; a second account places it 605 years before the same era ; a third has 9,785 years and 5 months while the fourth has 14,793 years. Is it that even at the time when the work was written the date of the Nirvāṇa was unsettled ?

I may be allowed to quote one more verse as it is likely to throw some light on the present question :—

एवं वत्ससहस्रे पुडकक्की हवेद इक्केवको ।
पञ्चसयवच्छरेसु एक्केको सहस्र उपकक्की ॥

छाया :— एवं वर्षसहस्रे पृथक् कल्किर्भवति एकेकः ।
पञ्चशतवत्सरेषु एकेकस्तथाच उपकल्किः ॥

This means that every 1000 years a new Kalki arises and every 500 years a new Upakalki. This should lead us to suspect the authenticity of Kalkirāja as referred to by the Digambara writers. Without condemning wholesale Jinasena's chronology, we still can say that his statement about Kalkirāja merely echoes this tradition, and that therefore it is not based on historical facts. He might have inserted it in accordance with the tradition current in his time. If such be the case, we shall have to discard the tradition as historically valueless.

The same conclusion is arrived at if we refer to the Śvetāmbara writers who have also preserved the Kalki tradition. According to Muni Jinavijayaaji the oldest Śvetāmbara work which refers to Kalkirāja is the Mahāvīrachariyam written in 1141<sup>3</sup> (Vikrama era) by Nemichandra, a disciple of Ambadeva. The date of Kalkirāja is given in the following lines :—

‘There will arise the Saka king 605 years and 5 months after my Nirvāṇa. After the expiry of 1309 years of the Saka era there will arise at Kusumapura the wicked-souled Kalki in the Prant-race (?)’.<sup>4</sup> This means that the date of Kalkirāja is 1915 years after the Nirvāṇa of Mahāvira. Thus there is a difference of more than 900 years between the dates given by the Digambara and Svetāmbara traditions. Nemichandra further says that Kalki will be king at the age of 18 and will reign for 68 years. Thus his death will occur in 2000 of the Vira era—a difference of exactly 1000 years from the date given by Jinasena! Again according to Guṇabhadra, Kalki was reigning at Indrapura while according to Nemichandra his capital is Kusumapura. According to the Digambara tradition, Kalki died at the age of 70; according to the Svetāmbara tradition, at the age of 86. According to the former the name of Kalki’s son and successor is Ajitañjaya, while according to the latter it is Datta.<sup>5</sup> These differences in details should make us cautious in accepting the truth of the traditions. Hemachandra’s Mahāvīracharita gives us an exactly similar account. The whole of this account is given further on in Appendix.

Another Svetāmbara writer called Jinaprabha Sūri has written a work entitled Vividha-Tirthakalpa (about A.D. 1444). His account of Kalkirāja runs on similar lines. He gives the additional information that the year of Kalkirāja’s birth would be 1442 Vikrama era. (We may note that the corresponding year of the Nirvāṇa era is 1912 and not 1914.) The names of Kalkirāja’s parents are given as Jasadevi (Yaśodevi) and Magahasena (Magadhasena). Jinaprabha mentions three successors of Kalkirāja—his son Datta who would rule for 72 years; Datta’s son Jitaśatru and the latter’s son Meghaghosha.

We thus observe a great divergence between the Digambara and the Svetāmbara traditions, about Kalkirāja. The latter put him down 1000 years later than the former. What is this discrepancy due to? There is one obvious explanation. It appears that the Digambara tradition is older; but when the Svetāmbara writers saw that there was no such king as Kalkirāja at the period given by the Digambara tradition they, reluctant to discard the tradition altogether, brought down the date by a thousand years, the reign of Kalkirāja was made to end in 2000 of the Nirvāṇa era instead of in 1000 as the older tradition recorded. That this is the most probable explanation is capable of some proof. When even the Svetāmbara tradition did not come true, another attempt was made to bring still lower the date of Kalkirāja. Muni Jinavijayaji states that he has seen a work in which the date of Kalkirāja’s birth is brought down so low as 1914 of the Vikrama era instead of 1914 of the Nirvāṇa era! This gives us A.D. 1857! A future historian may find in still another work the date given as 2914 of the Vikrama era.

This is sufficient to prove the utter worthlessness of the Jain tradition about Kalkirāja. It contains no grain of truth. We shall not, therefore, be wrong in concluding that there is absolutely no evidence for identifying this Kalkirāja either with Mihirākula or Yaśodharman.

Hemachandra's account of Kalkirāja.

Nemichandra and Hemachandra give the same account of Kalkirāja; the former in Prakrit and the latter in Sanskrit. We give Hemachandra's Sanskrit version. It is given in Sarga XIII of his Mahāvīracharita. When the first Gaṇadhara Gautama asks Mahāvīra as to what will happen in future Mahāvīra says:—

I may as well point out here that Hemachandra furnishes a good instance of the practice often resorted to by ancient writers of explaining current events as prophesied by some great man. Hemachandra was the religious teacher of Kumārapāla, the king of Gujarat, under whom Jainism seems to have made great progress. In his Mahāvīracharita Hemachandra makes the Tirthaṅkara Mahāvīra utter a prophesy to that effect. Nemi-chandra's Mahāvīracharita which precedes Hemachandra's by many years has, of course, nothing to say about Kumārapāla and Hemachandra. His eulogy of Kumārapāla and his deeds takes 60 verses. I give below a few of them; they are in Sarga XIII :—

THE JOGIMĀRĀ CAVE INSCRIPTION.

BY K. P. JAYASWAL, M.A. (OXON.), BAR.-AT-LAW; BANKIPORE.

MUCH confusion prevails about the real sense of this inscription. The late Dr. Bloch who published it in the Annual Report of the Archaeological Survey of India, for 1903-4,<sup>1</sup> thought that it refers to a Devadāsī who attracted lovers. Lüders interpreted it as a record of love between 'the man of Benares' (Balanāsiye) and the alleged Devadāsī [Tam Kamayitha Balanāsiye = the man of Benares loved her.<sup>2</sup>]

These interpretations make the grammatical mistake of leaving Śutanukā nama Devadāsī hanging in the air—without a predicate. The previous readings also are defective. Neither Bloch nor Lüders reads the ti at the end of the second line. Probably they mistook it as being part of the first line and read it as kyi (devadāsīkyi). The meaning of the expression lupa-dakhe (= rūpadaksha) has been missed. It is a technical, constitutional term which means a city-magistrate or some minister. In this definite meaning it occurs in the Milinda-Pañho<sup>3</sup> where it gives a beautiful description of an ideal capital, the capital of Dhamma, based on the model, no doubt, of the Hindu capitals of its time.

The text of the inscription is an official order or decree by the officer Rūpadaksha in favour of the ascetic woman, and not the love-making, Śutanukā. It relates to her worship of Varuṇa instead of to 'the man of Benares.' The word Balanāsiye has been misread by Lüders as Balanāsiye. I give below my reading based on an excellent photograph prepared by Messrs. Jhorston and Hoffman of Calcutta, which is reproduced here for reference.

Translation.

"In favour of Śutanukā, the devadāsiṇī."

"(Order) * Śutanukā', by name, devadāsiṇī, of austere life, (is) now<sup>4</sup> in the service "of Varuṇa."

"Devadina (=Devadatta.)

by name,

Rūpadaksha."

Devadāsi may be either devadāsi or deva-dāsi. In either case, the main interpretation is not affected. That it is in the feminine gender is evident from the case-ending in the super-scription. I prefer the former restoration in view of a datum of the Jātaka, (Vol. VI, p. 586). It mentions the Vāruṇī women who used to prophesy under the professed influence (dveśa) of god Varuṇa.<sup>5</sup> The restoration Devadāsi (the seeress of Varuṇa) would probably be nearer the original sense. The objection to Devadāsi is that the word is a very late expression. The meaning of tamkamayi (of austere life) is given in accordance with the Dhātupāṭha: Taki k,ichchhra-jivane.

It is important to note that the worship of Varuṇa had not gone out of use in the period denoted by the script of the inscription. It cannot be placed later than cir. 300 B.C. The forms of letters, e.g. of ya and ma, are invariably of the older type, while Aśoka's inscriptions have both earlier and later forms. This shows that the inscription is older in age than records of Aśoka.

The existence of the grammarian's Māgadhi in that early period, is attested by this inscription.

The officer Rūpadaksha was an officer in a capital according to the Milinda-Pañho. This indicates that the site of the inscription must have been near some ancient capital. It might have been the Chedi capital.

MISCELLANEA.

PRatihāras in Southern India.

The Pratihāras were a clan of people that formed part of the tribe of Gujars or Gurjars, a non-Aryan people that came to India from the north-west and settled there in about the 5th century A.D. Their name Pratihāra is also written as Pratihāra, Parihāra, Paḍihāra, Paḍiyār, and Paḍiār; and they have been, hitherto, met with in Northern India only, where, in the 8th century and later, there were Pratihāra kings that were ruling at Mahodaya (Kanauj) and in Bundelkhand. It is therefore somewhat interesting to find from inscriptional and literary sources that there were two Pratihāras who lived in Southern India in the 10th century A.D.

1° In a pillar inscription at Kaḍūr (Epigraphia Carnatica, Vol. VI. Kd. 1), there is mentioned a Paḍiāra-Dorapayya who had Pāmbabbe, the elder sister of the Western Gaṅga king Būtuga II as his senior queen (piriy-arasi). He is, later, called Dhōra in a stanza which follows and is identified by Mr. Rice (ibid., Introd. p. 9) with the Dhōrayya who is mentioned in the Saṅgamner plates of the year Śaka 922 (Ep. Ind., Vol. II, p. 215) and whom Kjelhorn proposed to identify with the Rāshtrakūṭa prince Nirupama, son of Amōghavaraha III.

This identification seems to me to be wrong; for, Paḍiāra, the word used in the inscription, is, as I have said above, but another form of Pratihāra and shows unmistakably that this Dhōra belonged to the Pratihāra family or clan.

This Pratihāra Dhōra must have been a chief of some importance, for, Pāmbabbe, the Gaṅga princess, was given to him in marriage and was called his senior queen. He had three sons of her, all of the Jain faith, and living, apparently, in the Gaṅga-vāḍi province; and he seems to have died in A.D. 942, predeceasing his wife by thirty years.

2° There is a commentary, known as the Laghuvṛtti, on Udbhaṭa's Kāvyalakṣaṇasāgraha, which, we learn from the colophon and from the opening stanzas, was written by Pratihārēndurāja or (as he is elsewhere styled) Pratihārēndurāja. The concluding stanza, however, of the commentary gives the name of the author as Indurāja; and it informs us in addition, that he was a Kauṭaka, i.e., an inhabitant of the Koṅka country (on the west coast of India). Here also, the prefix Pratihāra attached to the name of Indurāja indicates clearly to us that he belonged to the Pratihāra clan.

We do not know when the Pratihāras came and settled in the Koṅka; nor do we know in what way they were related to the Pratihāras of Mahodaya and of Bundelkhand. But, as Indurāja's Laghuvṛtti is believed (see the preface of the edition) to have been composed at some time in the tenth century A.D., we can easily infer therefrom that the Pratihāras must have come to, and settled in, the Koṅka before that time.

Regarding the Pratihāra Dhōra, nothing is known of him except what has been given above. It is, however, not unlikely that he may have been in some way related to the Pratihāras of Koṅka.

In dealing with the above inscription, Mr. Rice has fallen into some mistakes from his not having correctly read it. In p. 9 of his Introduction (op. cit.), he makes out that Dorapayya, the husband of Pāmbabbe, was also known as Immaḍi-Dhōra; and in the Translation, p. 1, he further makes out that this Dorapayya was a "sheath-bearer" and that "her (scil. Pāmbabbe's) king was giving her priceless treasures." These mistakes are due to the fact that he read line 1 of the stanza given in the inscription as parase mahā-prasādado orevaṇa Immaḍi-Dhōraṇ odu tann, instead of reading correctly as parase mahā-prasādadoḥ Rēvaka-nimmaḍi Dhōraṇ odu tann.

The correct translation of the stanza, therefore, is:

"While Rēvaka-nimmaḍi held her in great favour and while Dhōra, her lord, was giving her priceless things with affection . . ."

Rēvaka-nimmaḍi, mentioned herein, was the daughter of the Rāshtrakūṭa Amōghavaraha-Baddega III and was given in marriage by him to the Gaṅga Būtuga II (Ep. Ind., Vol. IV, p. 351). She is also mentioned in the Epigraphia Carnatica, Vol. VIII, Nr. 35.

SURVIVAL OF THE TERM KARŌRĪ.

Akbar in 1575-6 divided a large part of his empire into purely artificial areas, each yielding a 'crore' or ten millions of tanḱas or dāms, equivalent to a quarter of million of rupees. The officer appointed to make the collections in such an area was called a Karōrī, or sometimes an Āmil. After a short time the new artificial areas fell into disuse and arrangements were again based upon the traditional pargana areas. The designation Āmil for a revenue collector was familiar almost up to our own times, but the term Karōrī was supposed to have been disused very soon after its introduction.

I have been surprised to find that it was in use in Bengal as late as A.D. 1770. Mr. C. Stuart, Supervisor of Birbhām, etc., in a letter dated June 8, 1770, from Burdwan, reports 'the result of his enquiry into the conduct of the kreri, who has been confined by his agent, etc.'

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF CHALUKYA VIKRAMADITYA.

By A. V. VENKATARAMA AYYAR, M.A.; KUMBAKONAM.

PART II.—BIRTH AND PARENTAGE OF VIKRAMADITYA: HIS TRAINING UNDER, AND EXPLOITS DURING, THE LIFE-TIME OF HIS FATHER.

Birth of Vikramaditya and his brothers.

Bilhana<sup>74</sup> tells us that amidst all his victories and prosperity Āhavamalla was tormented by a profound sorrow as he had not the good fortune to be blessed with a son. The Lakshmi of the Chālukya dominions which had come to him in unbroken succession from his ancestors was often fluttering, like the bird on the top of the mast of a ship in the mid-ocean, for want of one under whom she could take shelter after him. He at last resolved to lay aside all regal pomp, made over the kingdom to the care of his ministers and, accompanied by his wife, retired to a temple of Śiva to do severe penance and obtain a son through the favour of his kuladēvatā. The royal pair at once exchanged the pomp and plenty for a life of stern simplicity, privation and austerity. Pleased with their penance, their guardian-deity made his appearance and predicted "O King! this your wife shall give birth to three sons. The first and the last will be born to thee by virtue of the merit acquired by thy works, but the second will come to thee by my favour alone and he shall surpass in valour and virtues all the princes of ancient times." In due course the queen bore him a beautiful son who was named Sōmēśvara. A second time she became pregnant and then she had wonderful cravings which presaged the future greatness of the child she was carrying, and in a most auspicious hour and under a most favourable conjunction of planets the wished-for son was born. Flowers fell from the sky and the gods rejoiced and he was named Vikramaditya. Not long after, the third son was born and he was called Jayasīma.

Bühler<sup>75</sup> has observed that "the king's performing penance for the sake of a son is in harmony with the Hindu customs and in itself not in the least incredible." Are we then to accept as a historical truth what Bilhana wishes us to infer that the three sons were born to Āhavamalla long after his accession in A.D. 1042? No. A slight reflection and close scrutiny of the inscriptions make this impossible. We learn from these<sup>76</sup> that as early as A.D. 1053 Sōmēśvara, the eldest son, was in charge of Bejāvola and Puligēre districts and only two years later in A.D. 1055 the second son Vikramaditya was governing Gaṅga-pāṇi, Banavāse, Sāntalige and Nalambapāṇi. They would not have been entrusted by their father with these important viceroalties, some of them on the Chōḷa frontier, unless they had already come of age to administer them efficiently. Knowing as we do that Āhavamalla came to the throne about A.D. 1042, we first begin to suspect from the above facts the authenticity of the penance story brought forward by Bilhana and our suspicions are confirmed and doubts set at rest by the Chōḷa records. In the 29th year inscription<sup>77</sup> of Rājādhirāja of A.D. 1047, Vikki, who is certainly identical with Vikramaditya,<sup>78</sup> the second son of Āhavamalla, is mentioned as a warrior of great courage. Therefore Vikramāditya must have been of fighting age in A.D. 1047 and even a warrior distinguished enough to have been specially made mention of by the Chôla enemies. He must then have been at least 16 years of age and therefore born at the latest in A.D. 1031. Be it remembered that Vikramāditya was but the second son and had an elder brother in Sômesvara who must have been born a year or two earlier still in A.D. 1030 or 1029. Therefore it is certain that Sômesvara and Vikramāditya, the first two sons of Âhavamalla, must have been born at least a dozen years prior to Âhavamalla's accession in A.D. 1042. The third son Jayasîmha, otherwise known as Śîṅgaṇa and Śîṅgi in the Chôla and Châlukya records respectively, is first made mention of only in the 2nd year inscription<sup>79</sup> of Virarâjendra of A.D. 1063-4 and so it may be that he was born a few years after Âhavamalla's accession to the throne. What, then, was the motive of Bilhaṇa in bringing forward a penance story that is historically untenable? There can be no other explanation but this, viz., that occasionally as in this instance, the poet in him prevailed over the historian and he was carried away with a desire, so natural among bards, especially oriental, to cast a halo of divinity around his patron and hero so much gifted with head and heart.

Closely connected with the birth of the brothers there is another question, viz., whether they were uterine brothers or not. Rice<sup>80</sup> infers from their Gaṅga birudas that Sômesvara and Vikramāditya were the sons of a Gaṅga princess and Jayasîmha of a Pallava one, and calls them always half-brothers. But this inference is neither necessary nor correct. The attribution of special birudas in each case can be explained as belonging to the ancient rulers of the provinces which they happened to be in charge of. Such investitures were not uncommon even among their Chôla contemporaries.<sup>81</sup> Moreover, Bilhaṇa's Vikramâ-kadêvacharita<sup>82</sup> [O King this your wife (mark the singular)] is decisive on the point and warrants us to infer that all the three were the sons of the same mother. Fleet has placed before us an inscription,<sup>83</sup> which while confirming the fact that the three were uterine brothers, gives us in addition the name of the common mother as Bâchaladêvî, who would appear to be Âhavamalla's first wife. To what family did Bâchaladêvî belong? Was she a Gaṅga or Pallava princess? In Dêûr inscription<sup>84</sup> Jayasîmha is given not only Pallava birudas but is described as Mahâ-Pallav-Âṇaya, i.e., belonging to the great Pallava lineage, and this would suggest that Bâchaladêvî came of Pallava stock.

Vikramāditya's magnanimous refusal of the Yuvarâja-ship and the appointment of Sômesvara as heir-apparent.

When Vikramāditya had come of age and become well-versed in all sciences, especially in military and administrative state-craft, Âhavamalla thought of making one of his sons yuvarâja and thereby designating his successor as was the custom among Hindu râjas—partly to be relieved of the burden of bearing the toil and turmoil of the kingdom all alone in old age and partly to initiate the would-be successor in all the mysteries of state-craft, so as to enable him to maintain the prestige and continue the traditions of the family. tells us that his eyes turned naturally to the more talented and therefore better-fitted, both by his physique and daring, but unfortunately the younger and hence less entitled of his two sons, and that he thought of making him yuvardja in preference to his elder brother Sômesvara. Âhavamalla soon found himself on the horns of a dilemma and unable to come to a decision, became somewhat troubled in mind. His own inclination and considerations of fitness and state-welfare would point to Vikramaditya, but custom and justice were on the side of Sômesvara. In a most vivid and charming dialogue, Bilhaṇa informs us that Vikramaditya, as soon as he came to know the perplexed state of his father's mind vacillating between right and inclination, respectfully but firmly declined the offer, alleging that the dignity of yuvardja belonged more naturally to the elder and that the appointment of the younger as such would not only be a deviation from the time-honoured custom but a blot on himself and the noble father and a stain on the fair name of the Châlukya family. He steadfastly persisted in this magnanimous refusal even when his father represented to him that both Siva's word and the decree of the stars pronounced him destined for the succession, but consoled him with the assurance that he would serve him as well as Sômesvara and toil for the kingdom under both without the high-sounding title of yuvardja. Finding Vikramaditya not moved by all his exhortations Âhavamalla reluctantly raised Sômesvara to the dignity of yuvardja.

Bühler<sup>86</sup> has remarked—"This part of the narrative of Vikrama's life which strongly puts forward his fitness for the throne and his generosity to the less able Sômesvara looks as if it had been touched up in order to whitewash Vikrama's character and to blacken that of his brother." But even the most impartial historian must admit that there is much substratum of truth in the picture drawn us by Bilhaṇa, as will amply be evident from their later career as rulers. Even the slight touching-up that one might come across was due more to the poetic temperament of Bilhaṇa rather than to any wanton perversion of historic truth. The question more relevant to our purpose, and really more difficult of decision than this, would be whether Âhavamalla ever really and actually proposed the name of Vikramaditya for yuvardja-ship or whether it was merely a poetic fancy of Bilhaṇa to give himself an opportunity to depict Vikramaditya and explain his later accession to the throne. There is nothing inherently impossible, for reasons suggested in what has been narrated above, in such a proposal having ever emanated from the father. Far-sighted as he was, Âhavamalla might naturally have preferred the consolidation and expansion of his state—a state for which he had worked so laboriously and so long—under his more talented son to its probable wreckage under another who, though more entitled to, was far less deserving of, the honour. After some vacillation the statesman in him might have prevailed and he might have made up his mind to brush aside a custom which stood in the way of his arrangements pregnant with such great consequences. If it can be allowed that the offer was actually made by Âhavamalla, we may be fairly certain that Vikramaditya declined it magnanimously, as Bilhaṇa has it, for Sômesvara continued as yuvardja during all his father's life-time<sup>87</sup> and on the demise of the latter at once succeeded to the throne peaceably without any obstruction on the part of Vikramaditya who, as we shall see later on,<sup>88</sup> not at all ambitious of the throne, was then far away from the capital, looking after Vēṅgi affairs. As instances<sup>89</sup> of touching affection between brothers, even royal, in the Hindu household are not altogether wanting, the above may not appear so unlikely as it may seem at first sight.

Vikramāditya's exploits under Ahavamalla.

Though Sômesvara was designated yuvardja the real burden of the state rested on Vikramāditya, who was invariably employed by his father to fight all his battles. Vikramāditya set out on a series of military exploits. In a brief compass, Bilhāṇa<sup>90</sup> gives us a rhapsodic but none the less succinct and more or less historical account of all his doings during the life-time of his father. He is said to have repeatedly defeated the Chôlas; penetrated into the south as far as the ocean; entered the Malaya hills abounding in sandal-wood trees; reinstated the king of Mâlava who sought his protection; carried his arms as far north as Gauḍa (Bengal), Kâmarûpa (Assam); passed through the Eastern Ghats; came to Kâñchi and plundered the same; destroyed the Malaya forests; defeated the lord of Kêraḷa; took the city of Gaṅgaikupḍa, the capital of the Chôlas; plundered Kâñchi once again; thence directed his arms to Vêṅgi and Chakrakôṭa; and while returning to the banks of the Kṛishṇâ, heard the sad news of the death of his father at Tuṅgabhadra.

It is not impossible, though Bühler<sup>91</sup> gives it up as hopeless, in the face of the now available Chôla records which throw light on this portion of history, to determine somewhat the chronological order of these wars embracing a period of nearly a quarter of a century. The most convenient method would be to discuss them seriatim.

Vikramāditya's first descent on the south.

Vikramāditya's first intervention in Chôla and Malaya affairs was in A.D. 1047 circa,<sup>92</sup> when Vikki is mentioned as a warrior of great courage.

Who was the king of Mâlava that sought the protection of the Châlukya sovereign and when and under what circumstances did he do it? In the Mândhâtâ plate<sup>93</sup> of A.D. 1055-6 Jayasimha is mentioned as the ruler of Dhârâ, meditating on the illustrious

<sup>89</sup> Apart from the exemplary Bharata of the Râmâyana, mention may be made of the Chêra prince Ilakkô-adigal who, to avoid the chagrin of his elder brother and the stain of usurpation, is said to have instantly renounced the pleasures of the mundane world and become a sanyâsin (to attain the immortal throne of the gods), when a tactless but unerring astrologer predicted in the open court that he was destined for the succession after the impending death of his father in preference to his elder brother Chêran Sheṅkoppuvan. feet of Bhôjadêva<sup>94</sup> and this furnishes us, says Prof. Kielhorn, 'a sure and fairly definite limit beyond which the reign of Bhôjadêva could not have extended.'<sup>95</sup> Bhôja must therefore have died in A.D. 1055 at the latest and it is probable that he died only shortly before. The death of Bhôja without issue after a long and illustrious reign of about 50 years (A.D. 1005 to 1055)<sup>96</sup> involved Mâlava in difficulties and furnished a golden opportunity to his neighbour and hereditary enemy Karṇa of Chêdi—one of the greatest warriors of the age—who had formed a confederacy with Bhîmadêva I of Gujarât with a view to attack Mâlava from two sides and sacked Dhârâ soon after Bhôja's death.<sup>97</sup> Even the Karṇâjas would appear to have joined this confederacy for some time.<sup>98</sup> The country was thus invested by enemies on all sides and Jayasîmha, Bhôja's relative, unable to maintain himself against this powerful combination, requested Âhavamalla not only to secede from the confederacy but also to assist him. Keen diplomat as he was, Âhavamalla began to reconsider his decision and thought that a weak Mâlava would swell the strength of Chêdi and Gujarât and might prove a source of anxiety to the Châlukya frontier on the north, but a strong and friendly one would not only be a check on the southern aggressions of these neighbours but might go a long way towards healing the old hostile memories of the Paramâra and the Châlukya which would be of no small value, especially against the troublous Chôlas in the south. He therefore changed sides and at once marched against Chêdi in person to draw off Karṇa from Mâlava and defeated him in battle. At the same time Âhavamalla directed his son Vikramâditya, who was then in the southern end of his dominions, to go to Mâlava and settle its internal affairs. Accordingly the son proceeded to Mâlava, successfully interfered in its chaotic domestic affairs, befriended Udayâditya, another relative of Bhôja, who in the meanwhile was defending himself as best he could against Karṇa and succeeded in reinstating Jayasîmha on the throne of Dhârâ.<sup>99</sup> Not long after Jayasîmha died and he was succeeded by Udayâditya. This conjoint and timely help of both the father and the son for ferlorn Jayasîmha and their timely intervention in the affairs of Mâlava

<sup>95</sup> The discovery of the Mandhâtâ plate settles beyond doubt the duration of Bhôja's rule over Mâlava. In the face of this record Bühler (Vik. Charita, Introduction, 23, n. 1) must give up his contention that 'it is not impossible that Bhôja was alive in A.D. 1063-5' and that 'Bhôja of Dhârâ was a contemporary of Bilhapa whom he did not visit though he might have done so.' Vik. Charita, XIII, 96, on which Bühler relies for his conclusion does not bear him out. Even according to his own translation it runs thus: "Dhârâ is said to have cried to Bilhapa in pitiful tones—'Bhôja is my king; he forsooth is none of the vulgar princes; see to me! why did'st thou not come into his presence?' (while he was alive!)" Bühler misinterprets the above stanza to mean that Bhôja was merely out in camp without minding the significance of the italicised expressions (which are our own) which would be too strong language to refer to the temporary absence of the king and which certainly suggest the death of the king as a woe which had befallen Dhârâ. Rājataranginī (VII, 935-7) states that Bilhapa left Kashmir during the reign (probably nominal) of Kalasa (A.D. 1062-80). He next stayed for some years in the court of Karṇa of Dhârâ and then only came to Dhârâ. So it must have been at least a decade after Bhôja's death when he could have visited Dhârâ. Moreover Bilhapa, who according to Kalhapa's Rājataranginī, felt even the splendour of a poet-laureate in Karṇâja's deception (VII, 935-7), would not have gone to the Dekkan if such a liberal patron of letters as Bhôja were out in camp, without waiting for him, which was not unusual with oriental poets.

was a great stroke of diplomacy and conciliation and it speaks volumes for their statecraft and enlightened generosity that, in glaring contrast to Karṇa's cupidity, neither the father nor the son tried to utilise the opportunity to rend or to annex the inimical kingdom for himself.

Invasion of Gauḍa and Kāmarūpa.

The invasion of Gauḍa and Kāmarūpa might have taken place on Vikramāditya's return journey from Mālava. Their conquest is not probable, but it is just possible that he made a cavalry raid on them.

Vikramāditya's second descent on the south. Kūḍalaśaṅgamam.

As has already been pointed out,<sup>100</sup> even the well-contested day of Koppa (A.D. 1053-4) did not pronounce finally between the Chōlas and the Chālukyas. Evidently the Chōla aggression began to ebb slowly ever since the death of Rājādhirāja at Koppa and Rājendra his associate does not seem to have done anything during his independent reign of about 10 years till A.D. 1062. Rājendradēva was succeeded by his son Rājamahendra, of whom nothing more is known than that he administered justice three or four times better than even the proverbial Manu,<sup>1</sup> and that he made a free-gift of a sarpa-śayana (serpent-bed) to the god in the temple at Śrīraṅgam.<sup>2</sup> After him the Chōla dominions passed away to his uncle Virarājendra, who ascended the throne in A.D. 1062-3, according to Prof. Kielhorn's astronomical calculations.<sup>3</sup> Virarājendra was far more active and energetic than his immediate predecessor and wanted, if possible, to avenge the death of Rājādhirāja. To keep back the tide of Chōla aggression, Āhavamalla had already appointed<sup>4</sup> his most talented son Vikramāditya to be the governor of Banavāse, Gaṅgapāḍi, Sāntalige, and Nolaṃbapāḍi—all on the Chōla frontier—from A.D. 1055 to 1062. An inscription<sup>5</sup> of Virarājendra as early as the second year of his reign (A.D. 1063-4) records that he drove from the battlefield at Gaṅgapāḍi into the Tuṅgabhadra the Mahāśāmantas, whose strong hands wielded cruel bows, along with Vikalan who fought under a banner that inspired strength. This was the first encounter of Virarājendradēva with the Chalukki Āhavamalla. In his second exploit he defeated the army which Vikramāditya had despatched into Vēṅgināḍu in the same year and cut off the head of Vikramāditya's daṇḍāṇḍyaka (general) Chāvuṇḍarāya. Meanwhile when the eyes of both Vikramāditya and Virarājendra were thus momentarily cast on Vēṅgi, the never-ending struggle between the Chōlas and the Chālukyas on the Tuṅgabhadra assumed greater proportions. A fierce battle at Kūḍalaśaṅgamam<sup>6</sup> at the junction of the Kṛishṇā and the Pañchagaṅgā<sup>7</sup> was fought in the second year of Virarājendra (A.D. 1063-4) wherein Āhavamalla is said to have retreated with his great army along with his two sons Vikkalan and Siṅgaṇan. The Chōla claims this to be his third successful encounter with Āhavamalla, but if we exclude the minor attacks at Gaṅgapāḍi and Vēṅgi this was his first and the only really great exploit against the Chālukyas and deservedly do the Kalīṅgattupparani <sup>8</sup> and Vikramacōḷan-ulā <sup>9</sup> refer to him as the renowned victor at Kūḷalśaṅgamam. Thus the death of Rājādhiraḷa at Keppa in A.D. 1053-4 was thus avenged in a way at Kūḷalśaṅgamam in A.D. 1063, nearly a decade later.

Virarājendra followed up his victory at Kūḷal and claims to have defeated before his fifth year (A.D. 1066-7), on the banks of the winding river—probably the Tuṅgabhadra,—some chiefs, among whom figure the Gaṅgas and the Nolambas, who were undoubtedly the feudatories of the Western Chālukyas. The fifth year inscription of Virarājendra at Maṇimaṅgalam <sup>10</sup> informs us that Āhavamalla, desirous of wiping out the disgraceful defeat at Kūḷal, preferring death to a life of dishonour, at once wrote an autograph letter to the Chōla king challenging him to meet him once more on an appointed day at the same Kūḷal, saying that he that evaded the appointment through fear was no king but a liar. Virarājendra duly proceeded to Karandai (Injal-Karañji <sup>11</sup> near Kūḷal) and though he waited there for more than a month after the appointed day, Āhavamalla did not turn up. Virarājendra too readily assumed that his absence was due to cowardice and called him a liar as he did not keep his appointment and made much of the good situation in which he found himself. He claims to have planted a pillar of victory on the Tuṅgabhadra; not content with this he made an image of the Vallabha king (Āhavamalla), tied round its neck the royal necklace, wrote unmistakably on a beard how the person signified by the image had escaped the trunk of an elephant (by his cowardly evasion of the appointment as the Chōla fancied), suspended the board as well as a closed quiver of arrows to the flowery (because arrow-stricken) chest of the image and thus ridiculed the Chalukki Āhavamalla. <sup>12</sup> The latter's failure to appear at Kūḷal on the appointed day was not at all due to cowardice as the Chōla king fondly imagined, but was the result of circumstances far beyond his control. He was suddenly seized with a strong fever which owing to unbearable pain culminated in his tragic death the very next year<sup>12</sup> (A.D. 1068). Under these circumstances was it not an unmerited slur on the fair name of Āhavamalla, the wrestler in war, that he should thus have been ridiculed and too readily assumed to be a liar and a coward by the Chōla on the eve of a truly great career?

Let us, then, examine why Vikramāditya went to Vēṅgi and Chakrakōṣa as Bilhaṇa has it. Here again the inscriptions confirming Bilhaṇa's statement give us fuller details. It was pointed out already<sup>13</sup> how Virarājendra in his second year (A.D. 1063-4) defeated the army which Vikramāditya had despatched into Vēṅgi and cut off the head of his general Chāvunḍarāya. What was the cause of the despatch of armies by Vikramāditya and the defeat of the same by Virarājendra? A brief survey of the affairs at Vēṅgi is but necessary before we can shrewdly hit at the right reasons that led to their intervention. It was noticed already<sup>14</sup> how the long period of anarchy and interregnum at Vēṅgi had been broken by the

Dr. Hultzsch understands the expression 'மோகர்வந்த புரட்டன்' as 'the liar who came on a subsequent day.' But 'மோகர்' here cannot mean the subsequent day but only the previous day. That this is the correct meaning is very well emphasized in Puranāndra, 279 and Kambavāṁkāyaṇa. Note also the use of the word 'மூன்றம்' in the same inscription. The term 'புரட்டன்' can only apply to Āhavamalla who failed to keep his appointment at Kōḍal, as is evident from another reference to him as 'பெய்த்தவன்' in the same inscription. Dr. Hultzsch has, owing to the wrong understanding of the single phrase 'மோகர்', totally mistaken the drift of the inscription. He mistakes the expression 'மோகர் வந்த புரட்டன்' to refer to Vikramāditya. Vikramāditya cannot by mere stretch of imagination be stigmatised as a liar simply because he was the son of Āhavamalla, who did not keep his appointment. Thus the reference can only be to Āhavamalla who fought on a previous or former occasion though, in vain at Kōḍal, but who, in spite of his autograph letter, failed to meet Virarājendra on the second occasion there and was therefore called the liar. The details of the latter part of the inscription are nothing but a piece of mockery or farce (not uncommon in ancient and even in modern times) and do not allude to any historical events with reference to Vikramāditya, as Dr. Hultzsch has supposed, such as that he came on a subsequent day, negotiated with Virarājendra to make him Vallabha or Chālukya king in spite of his elder brother, and was recognised by him as such. Vide infra Part III. In the light of the above criticism the inscription stands in need of revised editing.

intervention of the illustrious Rājārāja I (the Great) who succeeded in making it a vassal of the Chōla kingdom and compelled Vimalāditya, the first vassal king to marry Kundavvai, his daughter. Vimalāditya was succeeded by his son Rājārāja of the Eastern Chālukya family who ruled for 40 or 41 years<sup>15</sup> from A.D. 1020 to A.D. 1060 or 1061. The latter married Ammaṅgadēvi, the daughter of the Chōla king Rājēndrachōla I or Gaṅgaikōṇḍachōla. He died leaving behind him a brother Vijayāditya and an only son Rājēndrachōla II.<sup>16</sup> The latter in turn married Madhurāntakā, the daughter of Rājēndradēva. Thus for

—Kalīṅgattupparaṇi, X, 3.

Scholars have experienced great difficulty in rightly understanding the meaning of the latter stanza and it has remained almost a puzzle till now. Some have naturally understood the phrase ‘தபன குலத்து திராசாசன்’ to refer to Chōla Rājārāja the Great (I) of the solar race. But this interpretation contradicts the accepted genealogy of Kulōttuṅga I or Rājēndrachōla II as given in inscriptions (vide genealogical table below). So they consider the mention of Rājārāja to be a mistake for Rājēndrachōla I or Gaṅgaikōṇḍachōla due to the ignorance of Jayaṅkondān the author of Kalīṅgattupparaṇi. But it is wrong to associate such palpable ignorance with a great contemporary from whose admirable and orderly account of the Chōla kings with their characteristic features, the later Chōla genealogy itself can be reconstructed, in the absence of inscriptions even (vide Kanakasabhai Pillai's Commentary on Kalīṅgattupparaṇi in Ind. Ant., XIX). Moreover the above gratuitous assumption of ignorance would conflict with the author's own specific statement in canto X, 5, in which Kulōttuṅga is rightly represented to be ‘சங்கைகொண்ட சோழன்மேலி குலமகடன் குலமகன்’. To avoid this difficulty Rao Bahadur Venkayya has attempted though in vain, to come to the rescue of the author and has understood Rājārāja to mean the Eastern Chālukya king. His translation of the verse would run as follows:—‘Vishṇu appeared again in the royal womb of the queen of him of the race of the moon which dispels all darkness—Rājārāja's gracious Lakshmi who was of the rival race of the sun.’ He would point out that both the queen and Lakshmi refer to the same Ammaṅgadēvi whose husband was the Eastern Chālukya Rājārāja. (Vid. Epi. Rep., 1901.) But this translation is ingenious and cannot be accepted by Tamil scholars as it runs counter to Tamil diction and grammar. ‘அருள் திரு’ here can only mean ‘daughter born’ but not ‘gracious Lakshmi’ and the phrase ‘தபனகுலத்து’ must qualify ‘Rājārāja’ but not ‘திரு’ as Mr. Venkayya would have us construe. Moreover the 2 or 3 lines would then refer to the same fact twice over which is considered a defect with great poets (உதயது உதயக் குற்றம்) such as Jayaṅkondān, who is famed as the greatest expert in the composition of Paraṇi, a special kind of Tamil classic. To avoid both the above difficulties—the Scylla and the Charybdis—the word Rājārāja is not to be understood here as a proper noun referring either to the Chōla or Chālukya king. It is to be taken as a common noun meaning ‘king of kings’ similar to (மன்னர் மன்னவன் Kalīṅgattupparaṇi X, 29), a designation as much applicable to Rājēndrachōla I or Gaṅgaikōṇḍachōla. This is also in consonance with the author's quality of not using proper names but specifying kings only by their deeds. The above interpretation would avoid all the difficulties caused above and would save the author from the charge of ignorance. The correct translation of the verse would then be: ‘Vishṇu appeared again in the royal womb of the queen of him of the lunar race, the daughter of the king of kings of the solar race.’

three successive generations<sup>17</sup> there was a series of important political intermarriages between the Chôlas and the Eastern Châlukyas of Vêṅgi and the latter were more and more leaning towards the Chôlas. The adoption of their maternal grandfather's name by Râjarâja and Râjêndra is itself an indication of this. Râjêndrachôla II had become by extraction both on the father and mother's side a Chôla at heart. Consequently the influence of the Western Châlukyas over their brethren in the east was waning day by day. Vikramâditya probably wanted to regain the ancient Châlukya influence at Vêṅgi and to supplant the growing ascendancy of the Chôla there and it was probably with a view to accomplish this object that, soon after the death of Râjarâja in A.D. 1061-2, he sent Châvunârâya to Vêṅgi with a small army. To counteract it and to see that the vassal kingdom of Vêṅgi did not slip out of his hands Virarâjêndra should have sent an army of his own which defeated him and prevented him from gaining a hold there. Neither Vikramâditya nor Virarâjêndra was now directly interested in Vêṅgi, but each saw in it a lever of influence for the furtherance of his own interests and so keenly desired to exercise his influence on the 'buffer' state. With a friendly Vêṅgi each could hope to terminate the border struggle on the Tuṅgabhadra in his own favour.

Immediately after the disastrous Kûdal day (A.D. 1063-4) Vikramâditya seems to have directed his march to the north towards Vêṅgi and Chakrakôṭa,<sup>18</sup> as Bilhaṇa has it, perhaps to undo the victory of the Chôlas on the Tuṅgabhadra by creating for himself an effective sphere of influence there. This time he did not content himself with despatching his deputies thither as he did on the previous occasion but went in person. There though Râjêndrachôla II was duly anointed to the Vêṅgi throne<sup>19</sup> on the death of his father Râjarâja in A.D. 1061-2, yet his ambition was not and could not be confined and cribbed within the narrow limits of Vêṅgi. So, desirous of a tour of conquest or of the Chôla kingdom he bestowed his patrimony Vêṅgi on his uncle Vijayâditya in the very year of his accession to the Vêṅgi throne (i.e., A.D. 1063)<sup>20</sup> and appointed Vijayâditya his deputy and viceroy.

Disappointed in his expectations of Āhavamalla at Kūḍal on the appointed day, Virarājendra declared "certain it is that we shall not return without regaining the country of Vēṅgi which had fallen into our possession on a former occasion. Defend it if you are a Vallabha"<sup>21</sup> (strong king). This statement coupled with its tone of determination indicates plainly that Vikramāditya who had been tarrying in the north ever since the Kūḍal day from A.D. 1063-7 had nearly succeeded in establishing his influence in Vēṅgi and that it was with a view to check this ere it was firmly rooted that Virarājendra not content with mere vassalage or alliance, now resolved to conquer and annex Vēṅgi to the Chōla crown. The same inscription continues—"he defeated the great army which was sent to resist him at Vijayavāḍai near the bank of the great river (modern Bezvāḍa on the Kṛishṇā); his elephants drank the waters of the Gōḍāvari; he crossed over to Kāliṅgam; dispatched his armies as far as the further end of Chakrakōṭṭam, reconquered Vēṅgi and bestowed it on Vijayāditya who took refuge under his feet, triumphantly returned to Gaṅgāpurī (=Gaṅgaikoṇḍaśōlapuram<sup>22</sup> in the Trichinopoly district), the then capital of the Chōlas, with the goddess of victory who had meanwhile become resplendent."<sup>23</sup> The army that Virarājendra defeated at Vijayavāḍai could have been no other than the advance-guard of Chalukki Vikramāditya which was sent to resist the march of Virarājendra. From the statement that Virarājendra bestowed Vēṅgi on Vijayāditya who had bowed before his feet it has been suggested by Dr. Hultzsch<sup>24</sup> and emphatically affirmed by Prof. S. Krishnaswami Ayyangar<sup>25</sup> that Virarājendra supported the uncle Vijayāditya against his nephew Rājēndrachōla II whose cause, it is alleged, was taken up by Vikramāditya and that it was the disputed succession between the uncle and the nephew for the throne of Vēṅgi after the death of Eastern Chālukya Rājārāja in A.D. 1062 that furnished the immediate opportunity for the intervention of both Vikramāditya and Virarājendra in Vēṅgi. This inference, plausible at first sight, cannot stand the test of sound historic criticism. The specific statement in the Chellūr grant<sup>26</sup> that Rājēndrachōla was duly anointed to the Vēṅgi throne on the death of his father Rājārāja in A.D. 1063 and that, desirous of the Chōla kingdom or a tour of conquest, he bestowed Vēṅgi on his uncle Vijayāditya, the fact that Vijayāditya continued to be in possession of Vēṅgi till his death in A.D. 1077, undisturbed by Rājēndrachōla II (Kulōttuṅga I) even after he became Chōla emperor and that after his death Rājēndrachōla II peaceably appointed his sons as viceroys of Vēṅgi, the high terms<sup>27</sup> in which Vijayāditya is referred to in the Chellūr grant of Virachōla, the omission of the name of Vijayāditya—a deputy rather than an independent ruler—from all Eastern Chālukya genealogies, the notice of Rājiga (a shortened form of Rājēndrachōja in Bilhana's Vikramādikadēvacharita<sup>28</sup> as the 'lord of Vēṅgi' just before his accession to the Chōja throne and more than all the enigma<sup>29</sup> of Rājēndrachōja II's position if the disputed succession were allowed, all these taken together go to discredit entirely the story of the disputed succession and prove that the uncle and the nephew were on the best terms possible without any ill-will between them. If Virarājendra really conquered Vēṅgi as the inscription affirms, then it passes one's understanding why he should have contented himself merely with the status quo of an allegiance and why he should not have annexed in accordance with his former resolve—a country so valuable from a diplomatic standpoint and anticipated the work of Rājēndrachōja II or Kulōttuṅga I by a few years by bringing the two crowns, Vēṅgi and Chōja under one rule, embracing the whole eastern seaboard. Matters do not seem to have been so entirely favourable to Virarājendra as the inscription boasts and the alleged conquest and bestowal of Vēṅgi on Vijayāditya must betaken cum grano salis.<sup>30</sup> Our suspicions are only increased by the Gaṅga grant published by Fleet wherein Rājarāja of Kaliṅganagara (A.D. 1068-1076), the son-in-law<sup>31</sup> of Rājēndrachōja II, is said to have come to the relief of the said Vijayāditya "the waning lord of Vēṅgi when beginning to grow old, he left Vēṅgi, as if he were a sun leaving the western sky and was about to sink in the great ocean of the Chōḍas."<sup>32</sup> This Chōja danger could not have been from Rājēndrachōja II (Kulōttuṅga), as Dr. Hultzsch<sup>33</sup> takes it, but could have been only from Virarājendra. Virarājendra, far from being a protector of Vijayāditya, as would appear from the Maṇimaigalam inscription, must have been the very person that threatened his kingdom with annexation for his desertion of the Chōja allegiance and change of sides. The truth was when Vijayāditya, the deputy of Vēṅgi, was hard pressed by Virarājendra with annexation about A.D. 1067 and could not defend himself singly, Vikramāditya, who for years was working in the north against his enemy Virarājendra and who was perhaps the root cause of Vijayāditya's desertion, came to his rescue, went to Chakrakōṭṭa and Kaliṅganagara and easily formed a triple alliance with the kings of those countries who saw a menace to their own state in the annihilation or annexation of Vēṅgi by Virarājendra. Virarājendra tried though in vain to break up this combination and that was the reason why he had to send his armies to the Gôdâvari, Kaliṅgam and even as far as the further end of Chakrakôṭṭam as the inscription has it. The triple alliance was eminently successful in its main object of frustrating the absorption of Vēṅgi in the Chôḷa empire though Vijayāditya had to return to the status quo and acknowledge Chôḷa sovereignty over him as of old. Thus Vikramāditya averted an impending catastrophe in the north and maintained the balance of power by eminently transforming the situation in Vēṅgi, Kaliṅganagara and Chakrakôṭṭa by means of timely alliances with their rulers. While he was thus returning from his arduous exploits in the north he heard that his father, who had been suddenly seized with a strong fever, finding the pain unbearable and the end inevitable, had gone to the Tuṅgabhadra and after performing the rites of the supreme yôga at Kuruvartti, had drowned himself amidst the din of waves and musical instruments on the 29th or 30th March, A.D. 1068.<sup>24</sup>

<sup>29</sup> Rājēndrachōja II could not have remained in Vēṅgi if Vijayāditya his enemy had been reinstated on its throne, nor could he have remained in the Chōja dominions for Virarājendra, the ally of Vijayāditya, would keep him out. Where, then, was Rājendra II down to his accession to the Chōja throne? Vide my forthcoming article on "The Life and Times of Kulōttuṅga" wherein this question will be more fully threshed out.

Résumé of Vikramāditya's work under Āhavamalla.

Thus for nearly a quarter of a century, Vikramāditya, the worthy son of a noble father associated himself with the latter in almost all his great undertakings and shared all his burdens. In his two descents on the south, in his successful intervention in the internal affairs of Mālava and in his diplomatic transformation of the situation in Vēṅgi and the north eminently favorable to the Chālukya interests, he gave tokens of rare strategic capacity, originality of conception, boldness of resolution and rapidity of action which would have won immortal historic fame for any general. Nay, more, in these brilliant campaigns were laid the foundations of Vikramāditya's future greatness as an administrator, for, talented beyond measure as he was by nature, he had the good fortune to be thus trained under and associated with Āhavamalla, who was without doubt one of the greatest warriors and statesmen of the times.

MISCELLANEA.

RĀSHTRĪYA.

According to Rudradāman's inscription on the great edict rock at Gīrnār in Kāthiāwāḍa, a lake called Sudarāna near the edict rock was originally made by Pushyagupta, the Vaiśya, who is described as a rāshṭrīya of the Maurya Emperor Chandragupta. In the Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. I, Part I, p. 13, the word 'rāshṭrīya' was taken to mean a brother-in-law. Kielhorn, however, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. VIII, p. 46, took the term to mean a provincial governor. Neither the Arthashastra nor the edicts of Piyadasi mention any class of officials called rāshṭrīyas. The 'Kumāras' are mentioned as the provincial governors in Aśoka's edicts. We have, however, excellent testimony to the employment of rāshṭrapālas to designate certain officers whose salary was equal to that of a Kumāra (Kautilya's Arthashastra Book V, chap. III).

If, as is probable, rāshṭrapāla and rāshṭrīya are synonymous terms, it is reasonable to suggest that the Maurya governors were divided into two classes:

1. The princely viceroys who were called Kumāras.
2. Viceroys not belonging to the royal family who were called rāshṭrapālas or rāshṭrīyas.

TUSHĀSPHA, THE YAVANARĀJA.

The Sudarāna lake originally made by Pushyagupta was afterwards adorned with conduits for Aśoka Maurya by the Yavanarāja Tushāspha. Dr. Vincent Smith says that the form of the name shows that the Yavanarāja must have been a Persian (Early History of India, 3rd edition, p. 133n.). According to this interpretation the Yavana Dhammadeva, the Śāka Ushavadāta and the Kushān Vāsudeva must have been all native Hindus of India. If Greeks and other foreigners adopted Hindu names there is no wonder that some of them assumed Iranic ones. There is, then, no good ground for thinking that Tushāspas was not a Greek but a Persian.

Tushāspas is called 'Yavanarāja' and not 'rāshtriya'. This probably indicates that he was not a salaried official, but a vassal king under the Mauryas. We learn from several edicts of Aśoka (Rock edicts V and XIII) that there was actually a Yona or Yavana principality subject to the suzerainty of the Maurya Emperor. The exact situation of this principality has not yet been determined. But it is constantly associated with Kamboja and Gandhāra in inscriptions as well as in literature, and the Mahāvastu (Mahāvastu, p. 229, Turnour's translation, p. 110) says that it contained the city of Alasanda or Alexandria. Both these requirements, viz., association with Kamboja and Gandhāra, and the possession of the city of Alexandria, are satisfied by the country of Poclais or Pushkalavati (the modern Chārsada on the Suwat River) "in which is Bucephalus Alexandria" (Schoff's Periplus, pp. 41, 183-4).

BOOK-NOTICE.

BHĀṢĀVĪTĪ: published by BIMALACHARAN MAITRA, B.L., Asst. Secretary, The Varendra Research Society, Rajshahi, Bengal. 1918. Pp. ii + 21 + 614 + ii. Price Rs. 6

The Bhāṣāvīṭī is a commentary on Pāṇini's grammatical aphorisms excepting those that are exclusively Vedic. The book has been edited for the first time by Professor Śriśchandra Chakravartī, B.A., of the Rajshahi College. We cull out a few observations about the author Puruṣhottamadeva from the Introduction. According to Śriśchidhara Chakravartī who wrote a commentary on the Bhāṣāvīṭī about A.D. 1650, Puruṣhottama "prepared the Bhāṣāvīṭī at the bidding of the king Lakshman Sen" of Bengal. Thus the Bhāṣāvīṭī seems to have been written in the 12th century of the Christian era. "Puruṣhottamadeva was most likely a Bengali . . . In his exposition of the pratyāhāra sūtras, he says—अश् हश् वश् ञश् झश् पुनर्बश्. Now वश् and झश् are different in meaning and sound . . . It is only with the Bengalis that व and झ are identical in form and pronunciation. . . . Unless Puruṣhottama was a Bengali why should he remark पुनर्बश् ?" Again such passages in the Bhāṣāvīṭī as पद्मावती नद्यां यतुर् (६३११०) and लेखको नास्तिवोधकः (२२२२२) may support this hypothesis of his being a Bengali, for पद्मावती is apparently the east stream Padma (written in Bengali Padmā) on which the Sara bridge stands, and "लेखको नास्तिवोधकः" was a very familiar apology with the old Bengali copyists of MSS. His example वरेन्द्रीमगधम् may also be cited in support.

The Bhāṣāvīṭī explains the aphorisms of Pāṇini in their original natural order, like the Kāśikā. It does not tear away the aphorisms from their context, like the later works, Prakriyākaumudī, Siddhāntakaumudī, Madhyakaumudī and Laghukaumudī. So it is easily understandable. It is short. It is a work of undoubted authority, as is evidenced by the fact that it was quoted by Śrīpatidatta, Saranadeva (these two in their turn are quoted by Bhaṭṭoji Dīkshita), Bhaṭṭoji and Gopānātha. The book has been carefully edited and excellently printed. References to other sūtras of Pāṇini occurring in the gloss on any particular sūtra have been inserted, which will greatly simplify the work of the reader. The editor's notes are accurate and well-chosen. They show a minute and extensive acquaintance with the literature on the subject. Is it too much to expect that such a book would find a place in the curriculum of the Indian Universities?

It has been said that the text has been carefully edited. I give only two examples below. The aphorism ग्लानिस्त्वय क्लृप् (3-2-139) appears as ग्लानिस्त्वय ग्लृप् (i.e., ग्लृ instead of क्लृ) in most printed books, e.g. in the Siddhāntakaumudī with Tatsabodhinī, Bombay, 1915; in Bhaṅgī's and Kāhīravāmin's commentary on the Amarakośa; in the commentary of Mallinātha on Bhaṭṭi, I, 25, II, 32, 47, Bombay Sanskrit Series; in Principal S. Ray's, J. N. Kaviratna's and Durgaprasad Sivadatta's editions of Śitupālikaudha; in Professor Devendrakumar Banerji's and M. R.

Kale's editions of Bhaṭṭi. The correct form कृत् appears in the Mahābhāṣya, Benares edition and Kielhorn's edition; in the Kāśikā, Benares edition; in the Siddhāntakāumudī of the Tattvaviveka Press of Bombay, 1893; in the Siddhāntakāumudī of Taranath Tarkavachaspati of Calcutta 1863, and in the Pāṇini of Professor Devendrakumar Banerji of Dacca.

It is interesting to enquire how so many learned editors could commit the same error. The suffix is क्तु (anu). The क्तु is क् according to Kātyāyana who wrote a vārtika in verse on this matter, and also according to Patañjali who explained that vārtika in his Mahābhāṣya. Jayāditya, the author of one part of the Kāśikā, held the same view. According to Vāmana (joint author of the Kāśikā), however, the क्तु seems to be क्. Now the Siddhāntakāumudī and such other books say "गिक्त्वं न तु कित्" — "the pratyaya has क् as क्तु and not क्" [as might be supposed from the fact that क् occurs in the aphorism]. Unless क् occurred in the aphorism this remark would be meaningless. Reference to these commentators and especially to Kaiyaṣa will make this apparent. I am glad that Professor Chakravarti has printed the aphorism correctly both in the Bhāṣāvṛtti and the Nyāsa as क्तुस्त्वथ क् क्तुः.

Take another example: चर्त्वापार्हणोत् पत्तिपु- न्युक् (III, 3. 111). The two Bombay editions of the Siddhāntakāumudī already referred to print it with चो instead of चोँ (thrice in each book). The explanatory word चर्त्तु in the Siddhāntakāumudī might have led to this error. The present edition of the Bhāṣāvṛtti, the Siddhāntakāumudī of the late Taranath Tarkavachaspati, as well as the Pāṇini of Professor Devendrakumar Banerji print it correctly.

The Bhāṣāvṛtti is so called because it confines itself to those aphorisms that are required in the Bhāṣā, i.e., the so-called classical, as opposed to Vedic, Sanskrit. It excludes the Vedic sūtras as well as VIII, 3. 82-86 on pluta-svara; these latter are hardly required for the bhāṣā, and a Buddhist commentator might reasonably exclude them. Some aphorisms that are explained by Bhaṭṭoji as exclusively applicable to Vedic Sanskrit are, however, included in the Bhāṣāvṛtti, with a view to justify the use of Vedic formations in non-Vedic literature. Take, for example, the aphorism युवच (III, 2. 138) according to which मविष्णु is formed. Purushottama, following apparently the Kāntara, makes it a general sūtra, which would justify such passages as विष्णवे प्रनविष्णवे, किङ्कः प्रनविष्णु (Kumdra, VI, 62); दत् प्रनविष्णवे रोचते (Śikuntala, 2); जगत् प्रनीर प्रनविष्णु वेष्णव (Śitupilavada, 1, 54). Bhaṭṭoji could not help placing this sūtra in the chapter on general kṛit affixes, though he took care to remark कृन्सीत्येव and condemned Māgha with the observation निरकुषाः कवचः, which he borrowed from Haradatta. Mallinātha avoided the difficulty by reading अयसहिष्णु for अयनविष्णु. Amarasimha allows such usage, for he gives कृष्ण मविष्णु and मविता as synonyms.

Some other Vedic words found in non-Vedic literature are सगर्भः, अय्य, भवीय, भविष, भव्य, दुष्य, नभस्य, सहस्य, तपस्य which are all found in the Amarakośa. For accounting for these and others like these (e.g. भरिष्टाति), Purushottama has explained nine (or rather eleven) Vedic sūtras occurring at the end of chapter 4. Book IV in his Bhāṣāvṛtti. He concludes this section with the remark: "These words are Vedic, still they are sometimes used in non-Vedic language. Such use is in every way correct, for Bhaṭṭoji has included them in his Trikaṇḍa (lexicon) or because these are underivable names (अव्युत्पन्नवृत्ताशब्दाश्चाह वा)." This fiction of regarding a historically derivative name as underivable would seem strange to a modern philologist; but it follows as an inevitable consequence of regarding the grammatical writings of Pāṇini, Kātyāyana and Patañjali as Smṛiti works composed by all-knowing, infallible seers (ṛishis). The later compilers and annotators of Pāṇini regard his system as a Smṛiti which has repealed earlier grammatical works, such as those of Chakravarman, Gālava, Kāśakṛitana, etc. According to them, everything in Sanskrit must be justified by this threefold grammar of Pāṇini, Kātyāyana and Patañjali. Archaic forms (i.e. strictly Vedic forms) found in non-Vedic Sanskrit are undoubtedly due to the influence of Vedic studies. One who in everyday life uses the prayer विदम्वकं वज्रमहे might certainly write विदम्वकं संवमिनं ददधु without any explicit consciousness that he was using a Vedic, and therefore, in ordinary Sanskrit, an incorrect form. Purushottama has justified this by the rule इकां कृन्मिर्ष्वकान् व्यादि- गालवमोसि वक्तव्यम् (6.1.77). This would also justify the form युवावच which occurs in Pāṇini I, 3. 1. But it is said that this is not in the

trimsai grammar: hence such explanations are wrong. We need not multiply examples. It is almost a commonplace of the Pāṇinian system that everything must be forced into it or condemned. Now such forms of सम्बन्ध, अप्य, and अभिवाति are, according to the Pāṇinian system, not allowable in non-Vedic literature. Still they do occur in non-Vedic literature. What are we to do? The Pāṇinian, if he is not prepared to condemn them together, has to give some such reply:—"They are undervivable, meaningless or proper names अव्युत्पन्न संज्ञावद्." This is the reductio ad absurdum of the hypothesis of the Pāṇinian system of grammar being a Smṛiti work of all-comprehensive scope. No modern philologist would reject the derivation of the un-Vedic word सम्बन्ध from स(मान) + र्ग + य because Pāṇin does not record its use in non-Vedic literature.

The Bhāṣāyitī rightly explains many Vedic sūtras, as shown above. There are some cases, however, in which it has maintained as Vedic forms and aphorisms which Bhaṭṭoji does not deem as confined solely to the Vedas. Thus इदं च सम्बन्धे (I, 1. 19) is applicable to chhandas only according to our author, though Bhaṭṭoji makes it general. Similarly, the word सदृश, which occurs in the Amarakośa, and which Bhaṭṭoji and Haradatta permit in classical Sanskrit, is said to be chhandas in the Bhāṣāyitī.

The text of Pāṇini as presented in the Bhāṣāyitī agrees with what is found in the Kāśikā: thus (i) some vārtikas have been given as Pāṇini's sūtras, (ii) some sūtras have been lengthened out, including in them matter supplied by the vārtikas, or the Bhāṣya, and (iii) some sūtras have been split up into two. As examples of (i) we may mention sūtras IV, 1. 166; IV, 1. 167; IV, 3. 132; IV, 3. 133; V, 1. 36; VI, 1. 62; VI 1. 100; VI 3. 6. These are not Pāṇini's, according to Kaiyaṭa or Haradatta or Nāgma. The two gāṇa sūtras एति संज्ञापानमातु and नमवादा, (under सुवागतिपुत्र VI, 3. 98) are generally shown as independent sūtras of Pāṇini (VI, 3. 99-100) in the printed text of the Kāśikā and the Siddhānta-kaumudī. The editor of the Bhāṣāyitī has also printed them as independent sūtras. This seems to be due to an oversight on the part of the editors (and not of the authors of these works). For the authors of Kāśikā, Bhāṣāyitī and Siddhānta-kaumudī all mention that सुवागति is an भाष्योक्त गण after नमवादा, which shows that they regard these two as gāṇa sūtras. (ii) As examples of Pāṇini's sūtras lengthened out, we may mention I, 3. 29; III, 1. 95; III, 1. 118; III, 1. 126; IV, 2. 2; IV, 2. 21; IV, 2. 43; IV, 4. 17; V, 4. 5; VI, 1. 137; VI, 3. 40; VI, 3. 83; VIII, 1. 74; VIII, 1. 73 (1st word of next sūtra included). (iii) As examples of single sūtras of Pāṇini, which have been broken up into two, we may mention I, 1. 17-18; I, 4. 58-59; II, 1. 11-12; IV, 3. 117-118; VI, 1. 32-33.

The bisection of these sūtras was recommended by Patañjali and accepted by the Kāśikā. For this, at any rate, we cannot blame the heretical authors of the Kāśikā solely. Bhaṭṭoji also accepted this bisection.

NOTES FROM OLD FACTORY RECORDS.

14. Dealings with Native Officials.

1 November 1716. Consultation at Fort St. George. The President acquaints the Board that Yesterday a Mussoola [mastia, boat] laden with Salt Petre for the Dartmouth was by violence of wind and Current drove down to Leeward of St. Thomas [San Thomé] and fore'd a Shoar. That Aga Mogheen [Aghā Muhiu'ddin] Phousdar [faujddr, military governor] of that place seiz'd on the boat and Her loading, and upon sending to demand them in a civil manner return'd answer that He could not deliver them up before He receiv'd orders for [? from] the Nabob, which being such a peice of insolence as cannot be suffer'd exposing our selves and the Honble. Company's Estate to frequent insults of the like nature, this morning the Chief Dubash [dobash, interpreter] was order'd with the Pedda Naigue [chief of the police] and two hundred Peons to go to St. Thomas and make a demand once more of the Salt Petre and the Mussoola in form. At the same time Lieut. Fullerton with forty good soldiers were lodg'd in Trevilcane [Triplicane] ready to assist them in case of a refusal to bring away the boat, and her Lading by force. The Board agrees to, and approve of what has been done in this affair well foreseeing that if we should set down tamely under such usage from so inconsiderable a person as the Phousdar of St. Thomas. We shall feel the effects thereof both in our trade and transactions with the Country Government. (Madras Public Consultations, vol. 87.)

NOTES ON CURRENCY AND COINAGE AMONG THE BURMESE.

By SIR RICHARD TEMPLE, Bt.

SPELTER AND TIN.

Closely connected with the lump-lead currency there was in use, in Pegu at any rate, a similar currency in the alloys which may usefully be given the generic term of spelter. They have gone under many names and expressions among the old travellers and writers, and have been used as currency, side by side with tin and lead themselves, in many parts of the East and Far East. Spelter is properly zinc, but it has often been used loosely to express alloys<sup>70</sup> of lead and tin, lead and copper, lead and brass, copper and zinc and so on, almost precisely in the same way as have its philologically most interesting, though mongrel Europeo-Oriental equivalents, tutnag, ganza, and callin in all their kaleidoscopic forms. English trade equivalents have been white copper, white lead, Queen's-metal and bell-metal.<sup>71</sup>

Oddly enough, the first of all the accounts I have seen, outside the Portuguese accounts of the currencies of these parts, itself full of Portuguese expressions, is the only one that calls these mixed metals by their proper name of pewter. In the English Translation of the Collection of Voyages of the Dutch East India Company, 1703, we read in the diary of the First Voyage, 1595-7, p. 246, of Malacca, "Achem," etc., that "The little Bahar contains also 200 Cates, but each of these Cates contains but 22 Tayels, or 32 ounces and an eighth part, for the Tayel of the little Bahar weighs an Ounce and an half good weight. They weigh with that weight Quick-silver, Copper, Tin, Pewter, Lead, Ivory and so on." At p. 247 we read, "The Basaruco's [coins] are the worst Allay, being made of the worst Pewter." In the second voyage, 1598-9, we find again of Bantam :—"As soon as the five Ships cast Anchor, several Pirogues [prows] came on board, and brought all sorts of Refreshments, which they exchanged for Household Pewter, and gave for one Spoon as much Victuals as a Man can eat in two days."<sup>72</sup>

It was under the name of Ganza that the lump lead or lump spelter currency of Pegu was known to travellers. In 1354 Nunes found that in Pegu there was no coined money, but that pieces of a broken utensil of "a metal like frosylegra (?spelter)" were used for coins, and that this was called gamça (in Portuguese), and writing in the same year Caesar Frederick calls the metal ganza (in Italian) and says it formed the money of the country. The English version of this last writer, dated about 1567, gives the passage thus :—"The current money that is in this Citie [i.e., Pegu] and throughout all the kingdom, is called Gansa or Ganza, which is made of copper and lead. It is not the money of the King, but every man may stamp it that will."<sup>73</sup> La Loubère (Siam, E. T., p. 14) writing in 1688, says :—"Vincent le Blanc"<sup>74</sup> relates that the Peguans have a mixture of Lead and Copper

<sup>72</sup> Just as the Nicobarese will do at the present day, and, as the same book notes (pp. 107, 109, 115) that the Malagasy did in the 16th century.

<sup>73</sup> This, and similar quotations that will be given later on, accounts for the mysterious Tenasserim Medals, that have hitherto been such a puzzle, and turns them into traders' tokens.

<sup>74</sup> He was "the physician retained by the King of Siam to work in his mines." Marginal note to La Loubère, loc. cit.

which he calls sometimes Ganse, and sometimes Ganza, and of which he reports that they make Statues and a small Money, which is not stamp'd with the King's Coin, but which every one has a right to make. In 1726 Valentijn called it "Peguan Gans (a brass mixed with lead)," and in 1727 Alexander Hamilton talks of "plenty of Ganse or Lead, which passeth all over the Pegu Dominions for Money."<sup>75</sup>

Lockyer, in his exceedingly intelligent book, Trade in India, 1711, uses an expression which might easily be taken to be a form of ganza. At p. 130 he says:—"Tin from Pegu, Jahore, etc., in Gants, or small pieces of two or three Pounds, bears the best price. There is another sort in Slabs of 50 to 60. l each, but that is of less value:<sup>76</sup> We sold one with another for about 9½ Tale per Pecull." Again at p. 150 he talks about "Tin in Pigs and Gants." Tempting as it is to make the connection, I feel sure it must be abandoned, and that Lockyer's Gants were the "bundles of block tin" referred to by Terrien de la Couperie at p. xxi, No. 23, of his Catalogue of Chinese Coins:<sup>77</sup> the derivation of the word being quite separate from that of Ganza. Gants must, I think, be referred to the Malay Gantang and the Indian Gaṇḍa on the faith of the following quotations:—

GANT.

1554. Also a Candy of Goa, answers to 140 gantas, equivalent to 15 paraas, 30 medidas it 42 medidas to the paraa. A. Nunes, p. 39 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Ganton).<sup>78</sup>

c. 1596. In going to the Market [at Bantam] you find women sitting by the Palissades of the Mesquite or Great Church [Mosque], with Sacks of Pepper, and a Measure called Gantam, which contains about three pounds' weight. Collection of the Voyages of the Dutch E. I. Coy., 1703, p. 187.

c. 1596. They bring [to Bantam] from the Islands of Macassar and Sombaia, a sort of Rice called Brass, and give two hundred Caxas [cash] for the Gantam or Measure, which is three Pounds weight, Holland Weight. Dutch Voyages, p. 196.

c. 1596. A great deal of big Salt of which they buy 800 Gantams for 150,000 Caxas, and sell three Gantams at Bantam for a thousand Caxas. Dutch Voyages, p. 197.

c. 1596. There is another Measure in Java and in the neighbouring Countries, called Gantan, which contains about three pounds of Pepper. . . . They have also another Measure called Gedeng,<sup>79</sup> and measure all sorts of grains with it, it contains about 4 pounds, Dutch Voyages, p. 247.

<sup>77</sup> Compare the following quotation from the Ying-yai Sheng-lan, A.D. 1416 in Indo-China, 2nd Ser., vol. I, p. 244:—"Tin is found in two places in the mountains (of Malacca) and the King has appointed officers to control the mines. People are sent to wash it and after it has been melted, it is cast into small blocks weighing one cattì eight taels, or one cattì four taels official (Chinese) weight: ten pieces are bound together with rattan and form a small bundle whilst forty pieces make a large bundle. In all their trading transactions they use these pieces of tin instead of money."

1820. For dry and liquid measures they may naturally have recourse to the shell of cocoanut and the joint of the bamboo which are constantly at hand. The second is called by some tribes Kulch and is equal to a gallon, but the most common bamboo measure is the gantung, which is twice this amount. Craufurd, Indian Archipelago, vol. I, p. 271.

1828. Their dry measure [at Manila] is as follows:—8 chupas 1 gantun; 26 Gantas, 1 Caban. I could not procure a sight of the standard. Eng.; the Ganta 186,878 ditto. Remarks on the Philippines in Moor's Indian Archipelago, p. 82.

1830. The weights and measures are nearly the same [in Bali] as those in Java: the pikul containing 100 catties; the coyang 30 piculs; the gantang, however, is large, containing about 19 catties. Singapore Chronicle, June, 1830, in Moor's Indian Archipelago, p. 94.

In Tremenhoe's Report of a Visit to the Pakchan River, and of some tin localities in the Southern Portion of the Tenasserim Provinces, in 1843,<sup>85</sup> we find that at Ranaung the collectors of tin ore were "paid a nominal price of two (Spanish) dollars for 18 viss of (tin) ore, but as the payment is made by small ingots of tin, the only currency in use, the actual value received by workmen, according to the present selling price of the metal, is Rs. 8 per 100 viss of ore, the same quantity being at Mergui worth Rs. 40."

The following quotation, important in this connection, shows how tin was procured and purchased by the old East Indian merchants. Stevens, Guide to East India Trade, 1775, p. 113, says:—"Tin is to be bought at New Queda, in the Straits of Malacca by a Bakar,

equal to 419 lb. English. The advantage is considerable if you pay for it in Dollars. . . . The Country Ships generally meet ours, and will sell their Tin for Rupees, instead of Dollars. But observe to get large Slabs, if possible. If you cannot get all large, you may take every thing but their Chain-Stuff, like Jack-Chains, and thin Stuff of Birds, etc. . . . If you buy of a Country-Ship, know whether they sell by the Queda or Salengare Bar (= bahar): The first is equal to 419 lb., the other not so much." Now their "thin Stuff of Birds" is, I take it, the tin tokens which are now known to numismatists as Pegu and Tenasserim medals vide Plate III, Fig. 6, and Supplement Plate III, figs. 1, 5 and 6; and Phayre, Int. Num.-Or., vol. III, p. 38 and Plates III and IV.<sup>86</sup> Stevens on the same page says:—"If you are obliged to take the small Stuff," and by this "small Stuff" he no doubt meant lumps used as currency.

As to Siam, we find the factors of Ayuthia writing in 1675 to the East India Company<sup>87</sup> that "this King was pleased to give as credit for 40 cattees of silver 300 Bahr of Tinn, 1000 pecull of Sappan wood," and then that "This King proffers that if your Honours will supply him with silver, whereof hee finds a decay, he will repay them in Tinn at a cheaper rate than he offer[s] to any."

For the Malay Archipelago, Groeneveldt, quoting the authority of the Hai-yü (Chinese), 1537,<sup>88</sup> says of Malacca:—"In trading they use tin as their currency: three caties of this metal are about equal to one mace of silver."

That this referred to a lump currency is shown by a paper on the Dutch in Perak (Journal of the Straits Branch, R. A. S., vol. 10,) in which Sir W. Maxwell says, p. 268, "The old Perak currency—lumps of tin, weighing  $2\frac{1}{2}$  kati each, called bidor, have altogether disappeared": a statement which throws light on expressions quoted by him (pp. 246-247) from certain old Dutch treaties as well as on the Chinese record above quoted. Thus:—

1650. Contract with the Chiefs of Perak Dependent on Acheen stipulating that the exclusive Tin Trade granted to the [Dutch East India] Company by the Ratoo of Acheen will likewise embrace the state of Perak. . . . The Company to pay the same duty as at Acheen for the Tin it shall export and the value of the Tin Coinage to remain as it is at present, namely, 1 Bidore for  $\frac{1}{4}$  Spanish Dollar and 1 bahr of 2 peculs for 125 bidore or 31 $\frac{1}{4}$  Spanish Dollars.<sup>89</sup>

1655. Treaty of peace between the Company and Sultana Todine, Raja Muda Forcea and the Chief of Perak, tributary to the Crown of Acheen.—The Chiefs of Perak will pay to the Company a sum of 50,000 reals, partly in Tin (100 bahrs) within a few days.

1660. Treaty of peace between the Company and the Ratoo of Acheen.—The remainder of the Company's claim amounting to 44,000 reals will be settled by diminishing the price of Tin from 31 $\frac{1}{4}$  to 30 reals per bar until the debt shall be extinguished.

For the same period we have the evidence of Pyrard de Laval, collected about 1608, as to Malacca (Hak. Soc. ed., vol. II, p. 176), who says that, like gold and silver, the people cut "calin," i.e. tin, "into pieces to make purchases of goods."

For a century later we have the evidence of Stevens' Guide to East India Trade, 1775, p. 128f. :—"Tocopa. Tin is the only produce of this Port; about 100 Bahars of which may be had, if there has not been any Ship at the Port for some Time before. The only Coin of this Place is Tin, which is distinguished as follows :—3 Pingas are one Putra, 4 Putas are 1 Viss, 10 Viss are 1 Capin, 8 Capins are 1 Bahar equal to 6 Factory Maunds 15 seers Bengal. You must be very careful not to sell upon Trust here, and must always go on Shore armed."

Maxwell refers to all this at p. 142 of his Malay Manual, 1882, where he says :—"In Perak lumps of tin were formerly current as coin;<sup>20</sup> in addition then, Dutch and Spanish silver coins were also employed. The following are some of the old modes of reckoning :—Tin coinage : 2 boya are 1 tampang (value the 10th part of a dollar) : 5 boya are 1 bidor (value the 4th part of a dollar). The weight of the tampang in Perak was one kati. It was a small cubical lump of tin with a pattern stamped on it. The bidor weighed 2½ kati or the 40th part of a pikul."

As already noted, lead, spelter and tin have been mixed up by travellers, who have used the same expressions representing vernacular words to express all three. The following passages, quoted under the heads of Tutnag, Callin and Ganza will both give the ordinary equivalents used and show the extent to which the terms and the metals they represent have been mixed up.

TUTNAG.

1605. 4500 Pikals of Tintenaga [ misprint for tutenaga ] or Spelter. Valentijn, vol. V, p. 329 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Tootnague).

1644. That which they export (from Cochin to Orissa) is pepper, although it is prohibited, and all the drugs of the South, with Callaym, Tutanaga, wares of China and Portugal; jewelled ornaments; but much less nowadays, for the reasons already stated. . . . Bocarro, MS. f. 316 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Tootnague).

1663. The product of the Country thereabouts besides Rice and other eatables is Tutaneg, a sort of Tin : I think coarser than ours. . . . For this Tutaneg or Tin is a valuable Commodity in the Bay of Bengal and here (Dinding) purchased reasonably by giving other Commodities in exchange : neither is the Commodity peculiarly found hereabouts, but further Northerly also on the Coast; and particularly in the Kingdom of Quida there is much of it. Dampier, Voyages, Vol. II, p. 171 (quoted in Maxwell, Dutch in Perak, p. 255f).

1675. From thence with Dollars to China for Sugar, Tea, Porcelaine, Laccased Ware, Quicksilver, Tuthinag, and Copper . . . Fryer, p. 86 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Tootnague).

1683. Wednesday the 7 (February). Att a Consultation Extraordinary. Ordered that a sloop be sent to Conimero with Europe Goods Vizt. Lead Tutenague and Cloth . . . Friday 9 (March). Att a Consultation Extraordinary Afternoon . . . The particular and prizes are as followeth Vizt. . . . Tutenague ps 2031½ att P. 31½ per Cattiee. Pringle, Madras Consultations, 1st Series, vol. II, pp. 14, 24.

1684. Munday 3 (February). Att a Consultation. . . Goods to pay Godown Rent . . . One fanam per Candee for all dead goods, as Copper, Tynd, Tutanagg, etc. Pringle, Madras Consultations, 1st Series, vol. III, p. 22.

1688. And 'tis this White Tin which they (Siameses) call Toutinague. La Loubère, Siam, Eng. Trans., p. 14.

1689. (Tén) is so delicate and tender that it is injur'd by the very Breath of only the common ambient Air. For preventing which it is inclos'd in Pots of Totaneg, or in strong large Tubs of Wood, and in them is safely sent abroad. Ovington, Voyage, 1696, p. 309.

1703. "Told me that the Springs in China had pernicious Qualities because the subterraneous Grounds were stored with Minerals, such as Copper, Quick-silver, Allom, Toothénague, etc. A. Hamilton, East Indies, vol. II, p. 223.

1704. I received what goods they were pleased to bring me, but I found wanting 80 Chests of Japan Copper, and some Toothénague that I had weighed off at Canton, and put the Stocks Mark on them . . . Among which was my 80 Chests of Copper, and 200 Peculs of Toothénague, with my own Mark on them. A. Hamilton, East Indies, vol. II, p. 233f.

1711. Tutanague<sup>21</sup> is a kind of course Tin in oblong Pieces five or six to a Pecull. I never knew but one sort and that generally betwixt 3½ and 4 Tale a Pecull. Queddah and Jahore on the Coast of Malacca afford plenty of it . . . Having mentioned Quedah and Jahore to afford plenty of Tutenague, I would not be understood as if it was the proper Produce of these Countrys, only that large Quantities may be Bought there imported by the Chinese, who make Returns in Ivory, Wax, Tin, etc. Lockyer, Trade in India, pp. 129, 246.

1750. A sort of Cash made of Toothénague is the only currency of the Country. Some Account of Cochin China, by Mr. Robert Kirsop, in Dalrymple, I, 245 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Tootnague).

1774. Price Current of Goods at Bombay November 10th 1774 . . . China Goods—Tin, per Sur (att) Md. of 40 Srs. Rs. 10 : Tutanag, per Sur (att) Md of 40 Srs. Rs. 5 . . . Tin is the Product of most of the Malay Countries, and is used also in China, to mix with their Tutanag . . . Tutanag is a metal like Tin, but much better and softer. Stevens, Guide to East India Trade, pp. 109, 118.

1780. You find the Port of Quedah : there is a trade for calin or toutenague. Dunn, Directory, p. 338.

1782. Je suis surpris que les Nations européennes qui vont en Chine, n'aient point entrepris d'y porter de l'étain, puisque le calin s'y vend très-bien ; peut-être aussi que le préjugé a fait négliger cette branche de commerce ; car on a toujours cru que le calin étoit un métal différent de l'étain. On a cru aussi qu'il étoit la toutenague des Chinois ; mais ce dernier métal n'est pas naturel, et est formé par un mélange de calin et de cuivre. Sonnerat, Voyage, vol. II, p. 101n.

1797. Tu-te-nag<sup>22</sup> is, properly speaking, zinc, extracted from a rich ore or calamine ; the ore is powdered and mixed with charcoal dust, and placed in earthen jars over a slow fire, by means of which the metal rises in form of vapour, in a common distilling apparatus and afterwards is condensed in water. Staunton's Account of Lord Macartney's Embassy (4th ed.), vol. II, p. 540 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Tootnague).

c. 1804. The white copper (tutenague) has been tendered to us at sixteen tahils per pikul, but has not been accepted, the prices being too high. Raffles, Java, 2nd ed., vol. II, App. p. xxiv.

1813. The only currency of the country (Cochin-China) is a sort of cash, called sappica, composed chiefly of tutenague. Milburn, Oriental Commerce, pp. 444-5 of ed. 1825 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Sapera).

1854. Tutinagamu—Tutenague, pewter. Brown, Dict. of Mixed Telugu, s.v.

1886. Tootnague. Port. tutenaga. This word appears to have two different applications; (a) a Chinese alloy of copper, zinc, and nickel, sometimes called "white copper" (i.e., peh-tung of the Chinese); (b) it is used in Indian trade in the same loose way that spelter is used, for either zinc and pewter (peh-yuen, or "white lead" of the Chinese). The base of the word is no doubt the Pers. tûtiā,<sup>92</sup> an oxide of zinc. Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v.

1888. This coin (boursuruque, basaruco, budgrook) was minted all through the Portuguese time, generally of copper, sometimes of tin and tutenay [? misprint for tutanag]. Gray, footnote to Pyrard de Laval, Hak. Soc. ed., vol. II, p. 68.

1893. Tootnaug (nāga, San; tuttināga, Mahr.;<sup>93</sup> jast, Hind.; jas, Dec.; tambāgaputih, Malay; sattu, Can.; tuttināgamu, Tel.; nāgam, Mal.; tuttināgam, Tam.). Title from Tamul, San. from naga, San., mountain. Mahr. from tutt'ha, San., blue vitriol+naga, San., lead. Malay from tambāga, Malay, copper+putih, Malay, lead. Tel. from tutt'ha, San. blue vitriol+nāga, San., lead. Mal. from Sanscrit. Tam. from tutt'ha, San., blue vitriol+nāga, San., lead, from its bluish-grey colour. San. also yashada, meaning bright. Zinc. Zincum of chemists. Bluish-white metal which slowly tarnishes in the air . . . malleable, and when rubbed with the fingers emits a peculiar smell. Zinc, oxidised with the ore, is called calamine (madal tootlam); its constituent parts are varying proportions of oxide of zinc and carbonic acid (kary poolipp). Zinc has been discovered in the Southern districts combined with sulphur (gandhac) and iron (auhan), forming what is called blende; the greater part, however, is brought from Cochin-China, or China, where both calamine and blende are common. It is from the last, or the sulphuret, that this metal is usually obtained for commerce and it is then called spelter. Madras Manual of Administration, vol. III, p. 914.<sup>95</sup>

c. 920. Kalah is the focus of the trade in aloes-wood, in camphor, in sandal-wood, in ivory, in the lead which is called al-Kala'i. Relation des Voyages, vol. I, p. 94 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v., Calay).

1154. Thence to the Isles of Lankialius is reckoned two days, and from the latter to the Island of Kalah five . . . There is in this last island an abundant mine of tin (al-Kala'i). The metal is very pure and brilliant. Edrisi by Jaubert, vol. I, p. 80 (quoted in Yule, op. cit., loc. cit.).

<sup>92</sup> This has enabled me to light on a delightful Anglo-Indianism—1852. Tutiya, tutty. Tutiya akbar, shell whence they make tutty, and so on. Johnson's Pers. Dict., s. v. But Steingass, 1854, Ar. Dict., says s.v., that tūtiyā is zinc. However, I think modern compound derivatives of Skr. tuttha, blue vitriol, and nāga Skr., tin or lead, are more likely to be the real source of the word. See also Yule, Marco Polo, vol. I, p. 188f.

<sup>95</sup> By far the finest work of reference on the general Indian subjects; at the same time the most perverse and irritating, for it has deliberately adopted a spelling of its own for Oriental words, irregular and unique. Were it not for the Index at the end, which is very good, it would be unusable.

1421. He gave Sultân Shâh eight balish of silver, thirty dresses of royal magnificence, a mule, twenty-four pieces of kalal. Embassy of Shah Rukh to China, in Yule, Cathay, vol. I, p. ccviii. Yule's note on this is:—"Tin? Quatre-mère does not translate it. Astly has 'under petticoats'!"

1552. Tin, which the people of the country call Calem. Castenheda, vol. III, p. 213. It is mentioned as a staple of Malacca at p. 186 of vol. II (Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Calay).

1606. That all the chalices that were neither of gold, nor silver, nor of tin, nor of calaim, should be broken up and destroyed. Gouvea, Synodo, f. 29b (quoted in Yule, op. cit., loc. cit.).

1608. Another metal called Calin, which is white like tin, but harder, purer, and finer, and much used in the Indies. . . . In these galiots they have a number of drinking vessels like glass water-bottles, but made of cally, a white metal like tin, but much harder. . . . (Malacca) plenty of the metal called calin, which is much esteemed all over the Indies, and even in Persia and elsewhere. It is as hard as silver and as white as tin, and it gets whiter with use. Pyrard de Laval, Hak. Soc. ed., vol. I, pp. 235, 441; vol. II, p. 176 (quoted in Yule, op. cit., loc. cit.).

1608. Some of this money (at Goa) is of iron, the rest of calin, a metal of China. Pyrard de Laval, Hak. Soc. ed., vol. II, p. 68.

1610. They carry (to Hormuz) clove, cinnamon, pepper, cardamom, ginger, mace, nutmeg, sugar, calayn, or tin. Relacones de P. Teixeira, p. 382 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Calay).

1644. All the drugs of the South, with Callaym, Tutunaga, wares of China and Portugal. Bocarro, MS, f. 316 (quoted in Yule, op. cit., loc. cit.).

1646. Il y a (i.e., in Siam) plusieurs minieres de calaim quiest vn metal metoyen, entre de plomb et l'estain. Cardim, Rel. de la Proy. de Japon, p. 163 (quoted in Yule, op. cit., loc. cit.).

1688. This Tin or Calin (of Siam), as the Portuguese report, is sold through all India. . . . The Calin or Tin. All the Calin is his (the King's), and he sells it as well to Strangers as to his own Subjects, excepting that which is dug out of the Mines of Jonsalam [Junkceylon] on the Golph of Bengal. La Loubère, Eng. Trans., pp. 14, 94.

1726. The goods exported hither (from Pegu) are . . . Kalin (a metal coming very near silver). Valentijn, vol. V, p. 128 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Calay).

1770. They send only one vessel (viz., the Dutch to Siam) which transports Javanese horses, and is freighted with sugar, spice and linen: for which they receive in return calin, at 70 livres 100 weight. Raynal, Eng. Trans., 1777, vol. I, p. 208 (quoted in Yule, op. cit., loc. cit.).

1780. You find the port of Quedah: there is a trade for calin or tutenague. Dunn, Directory, p. 388.

1782. On y (Pegu) trouve des mines d'or, d'argent, de cuivre et de calin, mais on ne les exploite pas . . . (Malacca) on trouve de calin à la superficie de la terre, espèce d'étain que l'on porte en Chine . . . M. Daubenton a analysé quelques morceaux de cette mine que je lui avois remis à mon arrivée ; il a trouvé que le calin étoit de l'étain ordinaire. Sonnerat, Voyage, vol. II, pp. 53, 101 and note.

1835. The discovery of tin in the Peninsula cannot be traced, but it is assuredly of ancient date. Part of Perak is said to be the Témala, or land of tin of Ptolemy, and Calang (a name signifying tin in Malay),<sup>86</sup> to be the Malaion Colon of the same author and the Malaya Culam of the Hindus. Newbold, JASB., Sept. 1835, in Moor's Indian Archipelago, Appx. p. 83.

1887. (Calin). This was in fact Malayan tin. The word is originally Malay (kalang)<sup>87</sup> it appears in Arabic kala'i, and in the Portuguese writers as calaim<sup>88</sup>. . . the form calin seems to have been adopted by French writers from Pyrard, Pyrard de Laval, Hak. Socy. ed., Gray, vol. I, p. 225, notes.

GANZA.

1554. In this Kingdom of Pegu there is no coined money, and what they use commonly consists of dishes, pans and other vessels of service, made of a metal like frosleyra (? spelter) broken in pieces ; and this is called gamça. Nunes, p. 38 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Ganza).

1554. Vn altra statua cosi fatta di Ganza ; che e vn metallo di che fanno le lor monete, fatte di rame e di plombo mescolati insieme. Cesari Federici, in Ramusio, vol. III, p. 394 (quoted in Yule, op. cit., loc. cit.).

<sup>89</sup> Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Calay, suggests the port known as Kalah to the Arab geographers as the origin of cala'i, and notes that kwala in Malay (kwala and kuala in Crawford's Malay Dict.), "the mouth or estuary of a river" in Malacca, is meant by Kalah. As to this Lockyer, writing of Achin, says, Trade in India, p. 36 :—"On the arrival of a Ship the Shabunder must be applied to for Liberty to trade. At the great Quala or River's Mouth, those that go first a Shore are examined by the Garda." In Moor's Indian Archipelago, Appx. p. 56, we read of Sulo :—"Extensive forests of the finest teak, about one mile up from the qualla, of a very large river." In an early XVIth century map, torn out of some book in Latin by some by-gone collector, and entitled India extra Gangem, quae Europaeis propinquior est ; Cap. CX, being obviously based on the "Ptolemies" of the period, I find alongside Pego and Tanasari a city Queda, and further South in Malacca another city Queda beside Tacola, where, by the way, Tacola should not be. To carry on the evidence from the maps in my possession, the following show "Queda et Vien Queda" :—Carte des Indes et de la Chine, 1705, by Guillaume de l'Ile ; re-issue in colours by Covens and Mortier, c. 1740 ; re-issue by Dezauche, 1781. L'Inde de la la Gange [sic], by Vander Aa, c. 1720, founded apparently on de l'Ile, does the same. Le Royaume de Siam by Ottens, c. 1710, shows "Roy. de Queda, Queda, et Petite Queda." Regni d'Aracon, etc. by Antonio Zatta, Venezia, 1785, shows "Queda é N. Queda." All this goes to confirm the opinion that the earliest navigators knew of more than one place by the name of Queda. In the Times Atlas, I find, Sheet 82, Old Kedah and Kwala, and on the coast of the Malay Peninsula no less than nine entrances to rivers with the prefix Kwala, and three on the coast of Sumatra. Besides these there are, inland on the Peninsula, as many as six towns and villages shown with the same prefix.

Lastly, in Indo-China, 2nd Series, vol. I, 1887, Dr. Rost inserts a map at p. 262 showing "Kora or Kala," based on his identification of the Chinese Kora of A.D. 650-656, with Kala, p. 241ff., and in a note to p. 243 he says :—"Professor van der Lith, in his dissertation on Kalah has clearly established what Walckenaer and Yule had conjectured, viz., that Kalah is identical with Kédah (Kedah, Queddah). See Yule, Cathay, vol. I, p. xcxi.

For the identification of Takola, see JRAS., 1897, p. 571, in Gerini's ingenious paper on the Early Geography of Indo-China.

c. 1567. The current money that is in this Citie (Pegu), and throughout all this Kingdom, is called Gansa or Ganza, which is made of copper and lead. It is not the money of the King, but every man may stampe that will, because it hath his just partition and value; but they make many of them false by putting overmuch lead in them and those will not pass, neither will they take any of them. With this money Ganza you may buy gold and silver, rubies, muske, and other things. For there is no other money current among them. And gold and silver and other merchandise are at one time dearer than another as all other things are. Caesar Frederick, in Purchas his Pilgrimes, vol. III, pp. 1717-18.

1568. This Ganza goeth by weight of Byze (viss) . . . and commonly a Byza (viss) of Ganza is worth (after our accompt) halfe a ducat. Caesar Frederick, in Hakluyt, vol. II, p. 367 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Viss).

1726. Rough Peguan Gans (a brass mixt with lead). Valentijn, Chor., p. 34 (quoted in Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v. Ganza).

1852. Gangsa, bronze, bell-metal . . . gongsa, bronze, bell-metal. Crawford, Malay Dict. s.v.

1855. The old travellers of the Sixteenth Century talk often of Gansa, as a mixture of copper and lead, apparently stamped, which was the current money of Pegu in that age. Yule, Ara, p. 259.

1886. Ganza . . . the word is evidently Skr. kansa, "bell-metal," whence Malay gansa (the same), which last is probably the word which travellers picked up. Yule, Hobson-Jobson, s.v.

1893. Gangsa, see cunts, Cunts. Kamsya, San.; pachras, Hind. and Dec.; gangsa Malay; kanchu, Can.; kanehi, Tooloo; kantsu, Tel.; otu, Mal.; title from Telooqoo (cunsam) . . . Mixture of several metals, strictly a metallic alloy of copper, brass, tin, lead, and iron . . . Mixed metal, Queen's metal; any amalgam of zinc (tootnaug) and copper (taumram). Mad. Man. Adm., vol. III, p. 254.

EPISODES OF PIRACY IN THE EASTERN SEAS, 1519 to 1851.

By S. CHARLES HILL.

Introductory Note by the Editor.

[Mr. Hill, who has been engaged for some years past in an exhaustive enquiry into the History of Piracy, ancient and modern, has been good enough to send to this Journal an account of some thirty episodes of piracy in the Eastern Seas. Mr. Hill has further been so kind as to promise a full history of Eastern Piracy later on.—R. C. T.]

INTRODUCTION.

Piracy is illegal violence committed at sea or in any such place (ports, harbours or the mouths of rivers) as in a modern, civilized State would be considered to be under Admiralty Jurisdiction. The use of the word illegal however is confusing, for it implies the existence of Law, and there is not, nor ever has been, any universally accepted Law of the Sea. In trials for Piracy therefore it has been assumed that the accused are subject to the laws of their own State or of those of their victims, and, by a kind of legal fiction, their acts have been held to have been committed within such jurisdiction. That it is a legal fiction is, I think, proved by the fact that in many cases States, on the capture of foreign pirates, have requested the consent of the States to which they belonged to their punishment. But there is a whole class of actions held to be piratical which comes under a different category, viz., instances of violence committed under the sanction of the States to which the pirates belonged: such States as the ancient Illyrians, the Barbary States, the petty States of the Malabar Coast in India and of the Malayan or Indian Archipelago, all of which looked upon Piracy as a national or tribal custom and an honourable means of livelihood. Such also, one must confess, are numerous acts of violence committed under the sanction of religion, e.g., the Crusades, the continual warfare between Muhammadans and Christians in the Mediterranean, the Portuguese attacks on Indian and Arab traders, and the attacks on ships belonging to any Muhammadan or Pagan nation by the early European Adventurers in the Eastern Seas, all sanctioned by the laws of the States to which the pirates belonged, though they loudly proclaimed similar acts to be piratical when their own subjects were the victims. Lastly, and for the same reason, certain acts of inhumanity, such as the cruel treatment bestowed upon Protestant seamen by properly commissioned officers of the Spaniards, are considered piratical, for it is held, and rightly, that no commission can cover actions which shock all our feelings of humanity. In these two categories, it is not the illegality of the action but the inhuman nature of it which makes it piratical, and under them, I think, would come the German submarine warfare and the bombardment of undefended coast towns by German warships.

Instances of piracy under all these categories will be found in the record of Piracy in the Eastern Seas. It remains to point out that Piracy was indigenous to the whole coast of Arabia, Western India, the Bay of Bengal, the Malayan or Indian Archipelago and the Chinese and Japanese Seas, but though, according to the Koran, there was a piratical king in Oman as early as the time of Moses, i.e., about 1550 B.C., it is not until some three thousand years later that we can get anything like detailed accounts of particular instances of piracy.

In the following pages I propose to present to the reader a number of extracts, principally descriptions of sea-fights, taken either from old books compiled, if not published, soon after the events described, or from contemporary newspapers or from letters and depositions of eye-witnesses. From these he will be able to gather a correct view of the ways and manners of the pirates in the Eastern Seas, whether they were natives of Asiatic countries or adventurers from Europe or America.

I have found only two instances of the use of the Black Flag in this part of the world, viz., by the pirate Seager (or England) in 1720 and by a Malay prahu (prow) in 1820. The flag used by the pirates was usually the Red or Bloody Flag. This was the flag long recognised by all European seamen as signifying 'No Quarter' and 'No Surrender'. I have met with no instances of prisoners being made to walk the plank. This particular form of cruelty was apparently limited to European and American pirates.

I.

AN INDIAN PIRATE KILLED BY THE PORTUGUESE NEAR CEUTA, 1519.

The first of these extracts describes a fight which took place, not in the Eastern Seas, but in the Straits of Gibraltar, and is included as showing that natives of India were not wholly destitute of enterprise at a time when the Portuguese were introducing European Adventurers to the rich plunder offered by Eastern Trade. The fight was a fairly equal one, though the pirates were the more strongly manned. This will be found to be the case in almost all cases of fights with pirates, because it was necessary for them to make up by superiority of numbers what they lacked in discipline, seamanship and gunnery.

"This year [i.e., 1519] there was performed an exploit near Ceuta, inconsiderable with regard to the number of men, but great and illustrious because of the intrepidity with which it was executed. There were two pirates, inhabitants of India and brothers, who with a couple of large ships had for four years greatly infested the straits of Gibraltar and the neighbouring coasts of Africa. Gomez Sylvio Vasconcelo was at this time Governor of Ceuta. One of the pirates lay in ambush amongst the opposite islands, whilst the other kept out at sea, and gave notice to his brother, when there was occasion for his assistance. Vasconcelo, having received intelligence of this, immediately fitted out two small brigantines. One he gave to Andrew Vasconcelo and the other to Michael Sylvio, his two sons. Ceuta stands on a narrow ridge of land which runs out into the sea, so that the city has two harbours, one on the eastern and the other on the western side. The brigantines being fitted out in the western haven, the Governor ordered his sons to double the point and try to surprise the enemy. Michael, the youngest, according to his instructions, was the first to make the attack. Both were fired with the utmost zeal to execute their father's orders, yet both deviated from his council. The younger sailed on in the utmost hurry and did not choose to wait till his brother came up; the elder, on the other hand, was far from making that expedition which the occasion required. Michael in the most undaunted manner set upon the enemy. They, being more numerous, their ship large, their commanders of no less experience than boldness, and all their men well skilled in sea-affairs, looked with contempt on the brigantine. There ensued a desperate engagement, but our people being at last filled with the utmost consternation, hid themselves in the hold. The Governor at this time rode along the coast with a party of horse to observe the fight, and when he saw Michael in such distress he called aloud and made signals to his other son to make all haste to the assistance of his brother. But before Andrew could come up, Michael had driven the enemy from his vessel and disengaged her from the pirate. Having roused his men from their lurking holes, he reproached them for their cowardice, and at length inspired them with courage. He then made another attack on the enemy, and, the two ships having grappled each other, the fight was renewed with redoubled fury. The pilot<sup>1</sup> of the brigantine was killed, and his son, together with another relation, suffered also the same fate. Pedro Vieira<sup>2</sup> was likewise desperately wounded. Four of the enemy jumped upon the fore-castle of the Portuguese vessel. Michael, however, catching hold of a spear, threw it amongst them with great force. Luckily it struck one of the pirate brothers in the throat and killed him instantly. The other three still remained, but Michael, taking up another spear, attacked and drove them overboard, and again disentangled himself from the enemy's ship. Then, running towards the stern to consult the pilot what was proper to be done, he found him and several others dead, and when he looked about for Vieira, a most horrible spectacle presented itself to his eyes. This unhappy man was lying in the utmost agony with his entrails hanging out of his belly. As he was a man of age and experience, Michael asked his advice in the present juncture. 'Go,' answered Vieira, 'drive those cowards from their holes who have again hid themselves, and, since you are left alone, ply your oars<sup>3</sup> with the utmost vigour, and make off from impending destruction.' He accordingly again brought forth those shameful poltroons from their retreats. But the pirates, seeing several of our people killed some disabled with wounds, and others behaving in such a dastardly manner, renewed the attack on the brigantine. Meanwhile Andrew Vasconcelo appeared. The sight of him greatly discouraged the enemy, who being likewise tired of fighting and disheartened with the loss of their commander, sheered off. Michael Sylvio now consulted Vieira whether he should pursue the enemy. Vieira advised him to make towards the land, and by this means to endeavour to drive the pirates on the shelves.<sup>4</sup> He accordingly followed his advice. The enemy, being not a little frightened, with all their sails and oars made towards the opposite shore. Many of them jumped overboard, the greatest part of whom were drowned. Eight swam ashore and were made prisoners by the Governor of Ceuta. Thus, before Andrew Vasconcelo came up, his brother had finished the whole affair. This youth is certainly worthy of the highest encomiums, nor do I know which to praise most, his bravery, which was so great that he alone, or with the assistance of a few, and these weakened with wounds, did so nobly withstand such fierce and desperate enemies, or his modesty which would allow him to do nothing without consulting those whom he thought superior to himself in age and experience.<sup>5</sup>

ANTONIO DE FARIA, BY SEA-FORTUNE A KING, BEGGAR, LORD, HOLY HOLY THEEFE. circa. 1541.

The Portuguese came to India not merely to trade but to introduce the Christian religion in pagan countries which had been given to them by the Pope. However piratical their actions may have been, they could always throw over them the cloak of religion. On the coasts of Africa and Asia they found, not merely the indigenous pagan, but also the Arab trader with his Muhammadan converts. None of these wished for either the Portuguese trade or the Portuguese religion. When they were strong enough they resisted by force; when too weak by treachery. The Portuguese retaliated with cruel reprisals, and the Portuguese traders took the infliction of these reprisals into their own hands. Thus, when de Faria found himself ruined by a Gujarātī Muhammadan named by the Portuguese Coja Acem, i.e., Khwāja Hasan, he armed a vessel and set out in quest of his enemy, plundering all infidels on the way. The extracts which I have taken from Purchas, tells how he fought and killed him. His success and the booty he acquired inflamed his avarice and that of his companions, and finally caused him to make a raid upon the tombs of the Chinese Emperors, an act of impiety which was punished by his ship sinking with all hands in a storm. It will be noticed that both he and Coja Acem considered themselves as fighting under the protection of the Deity. It may also be supposed that the pots of powder with which de Faria provided himself for the fight were probably the stink-pots—a kind of combination of hand-grenade and poison-gas—which were early used in sea-fights on the Indian and Chinese coasts.

(no country in the world being like China for all kind of provisions) and there got two greater junks in truck of the other, and two Lanteas<sup>7</sup> and one hundred and sixty mariners, so that they were in all five hundred persons, of which ninety-five were Portugals. They had one hundred and sixty harquebuses, forty brass pieces and sixty quintals of powder, nine hundred pots of powder, four thousand darts headed with iron, arrows and many fire-works with other weapons. Thus provided, they set forth in pursuit of Coia Acem [Khawja Hasan], and by a fisher-boat learned that he was in the river Tinlan, there to fit and furnish the junk lately taken from the Portugals, to go with it and two others from Siam, where he was born, about two days thence. Faria sent Vincente Morosa in the fisher-boat with some of his Company<sup>8</sup> to inform himself more fully, which, making a show of fishing with the rest, he easily did and brought word aboard of the easiness of the attempt. In the night they anchored, and went up the river in the morning, the enemy knowing nothing till they came in sight and Faria crying out 'Hey, my Masters, in the name of Christ, to them, to them, Santiago!' Off went the ordnance, the small shot succeeded, that none now in the junk durst appear. His small vessels (Lorche)<sup>9</sup> coming from the shore with succour were so entertained with great shot that they could not help themselves, and by our small vessels were fired with the fire-pots, in three of them two hundred persons were slain. Out of the fourth they leaped into the water and were most of them slain by Panian's men.

"Coia Acem, which before was not known, seeing his Moors ready to try the water's courtesy to escape their fiery enemies, armed in buff with plates fringed with gold, cried out aloud that he might be heard, 'La ilah illalah Muhamed roçolah!'<sup>10</sup> What, shall you Muslemans<sup>11</sup> and just men of the Law of Muhamed suffer yourselves to be conquered of so feeble a nation as these dogs, which have no more heart than white heñs and bearded women? To them! to them! the book of Flowers hath given promise from our Prophet to you and me to bathe ourselves in the blood of these Cafres [kāfir, unbeliever, heathen]<sup>12</sup> without Law.' With these cursed words the Devil so animated them that it was fearful to see how they ran on our swords. Faria on the other side heartened his [men] in the name of Christ crucified, and with a zealous fervour reached Coia Acem such a blow with a two-hand sword on his head-piece of mail that he sunk to the ground, and with another blow cut off his legs. Whereupon his men with such fury assailed Faria, not caring for thirty Portugals which stood about him, that they gave him two wounds, which put such spirit into our men that in a little space eight and forty of the enemies lay dead upon Coia Acem, and the rest they slew all but five, whom they took and bound, the boyes cutting the others in quarters and throwing them into the water with Coia Acem and the King of Bintan's<sup>13</sup>

"Of the enemies were slain three hundred and eighty, of ours forty-two (eight of which were Portugals). Faria searched the islands and found a village therein of forty or fifty houses, which Coia Acem had sacked, slaying some of the inhabitants. Not far off was a great house, seeming a Temple, full of sicke and wounded men, ninety-six in number, which the Pirate had there in cure, whom he [i.e., Faria] burned, setting the house on fire in divers places, those that sought to escape being received on pikes and lances. The junk, which they had taken from the Portugals six and twenty days before, Faria gave to Mem Taborda and Antonio Anriquez<sup>14</sup> in almes for remission of his sins, taking their oath to take no more but their own. He took special care of the wounded and caused the slaves to be set free. After all this there remained of clear gains one hundred and thirty thousand taels in silver of Japan and other goods which that Pirate had taken along that coast from Sumbo to Fuchea."

JAPANESE PIRATES IN THE FIFTEENTH AND SIXTEENTH CENTURIES AS DESCRIBED IN THE HAI-KWOH TÚ CHI.<sup>15</sup>

This and the next two extracts refer to Japanese pirates. The piracies they committed on the Chinese coasts were primarily due to the treacherous dealings of the Chinese merchants, who took their goods and refused or delayed payment. The Japanese, afraid to return empty-handed to their country, as their goods had been provided by their Government, recouped themselves by seizing Chinese vessels and plundering the coastal villages. Gradually acquiring confidence from their military superiority over the unwarlike Chinese, they extended their raids into the interior and attacked even large and fortified towns. In later times they were assisted by Chinese who had been driven to desperation by Government corruption, or who, refusing to submit to their Tartar conquerors, betook themselves to the sea and to a life of piracy.

P. 138. The Japanese were naturally cunning : they would always put on board some of the produce of their own country, and at the same time weapons of war ; with these they would stand off and on until an opportunity offered, when they would display their arms and make a wild inroad on the coast ; should none occur, they would parade their produce, styling it 'tribute to the crown'. The south-east coast [of China] was much afflicted by them. Their envoys too often put people to death and otherwise transgressed the laws : the object of all of them in coming with tribute was to benefit by trade, and to connect themselves with the more daring and crafty of the inhabitants of the coast : thus they were either bearers of tribute or freebooters as it suited them.

P. 139. In the time of Shi-tsung (1522-65), . . . . . the cunning inhabitants of the coast . . . . . possessed themselves of the profit of the trade, which continued in the hands of mercantile people, until communication with foreigners was strictly prohibited : it then passed into those of persons of birth or station, who repudiated their debts to the Japanese to a worse degree than the others had done. When they were pressing in their demands for money, these men so scared the officials by their alarming language, that the latter would have exterminated the Japanese; but as soon as the troops were about to take the field, they wheedled them into moving off, telling them 'We do not mean not to pay you the full amount some time or other.'

The Japanese lost the produce of their own country, and being unable to return home, were very indignant. Meanwhile the leading bad characters (of China) such as Wáng Chih, Su Hái, Chin Tung and Mayeh, who had always been lying perdu amongst them, discontented with the Inner Land, escaped to the islands and became the chief advisers of the Japanese whom they induced to make descents upon China, which was accordingly ravaged by large bodies of pirates in separate squadrons, who wore the dress and counterfeited the flags and signals of Japan. . . . .

In 1552 Wáng Chih and the Japanese made a descent with a large force: their united ships, some hundreds in number, covered the sea.

P. 141. There were on an average three native Japanese in every ten, the remaining seven (were Chinese who) followed the others. In action they used to drive their prisoners on in front, and their discipline was such that all these fought till they died.

P. 142. Dressed in red with yellow caps, they attempted the great gate of (Nanking) . . . . . At Hú-yé they were surrounded by the troops and pursued to Yánglin Bridge, where they were entirely cut to pieces. In this affair (in 1554) the robbers were never above 60 or 70 in number and yet they marched several tens of li, massacred and wounded perhaps 4000 people, and this during some eighty days before they were exterminated.

P. 151. Extract from the Wu Pi Chi or Annals of the Art of War.<sup>15</sup> It was the custom of the barbarians of Japan to draw up their troops in the form of a butterfly. When they went into action the signal was given by the flourishing of a fan. One of them did this, and the body then rose (or sprang) up brandishing their swords. As they tossed the points of their weapons toward the sky, our soldiers threw their heads back in astonishment and the enemy thereupon cut at them below. Another of their formations was a long, snake-like column, in which they advanced waving a hundred-tailed banner, and marching one after the other like fish in a file. The van was composed of their stoutest men and the rearguard of the like; in the centre the brave and cowardly were mingled together. They rose every morning at cock-crowing and ate their meal squatting on the ground. When this was ended their chief would take a seat in a high place (or above them), the rest listening to his orders (or in obedience to his commands), brought each one his book, upon opening which it was seen what place was to be foraged on such and such a day, who were to command the parties and who to serve in the ranks of the companies. These did not consist of more than thirty men, and moved independently each at a distance of one or two li from each other. At the blast of a conch, which is their call, the company immediately closed up to support that which it had heard give the signal. Sections of two or three also skirmished about irregularly, brandishing their swords. Towards evening they returned, and every one gave in whatever booty he may have seized, keeping nothing back. The chief made a partition of the spoil in proportion to the amount contributed by each. Whenever they captured women, they were sure to pass the night in drinking and wantonness, until at last they fell asleep intoxicated. When they had nearly completed the pillage of a place they set it on fire; the smoke and the fire filled and illumined the skies, and while the population were in a state of alarm at its fierceness, the pirates decamped. They practised this ruse upon our people for the especial purpose of diverting them from lying in wait to attack them. When these pirates came upon wine or food amongst the inhabitants, they made them taste before they ate or drank themselves for fear that they should contain poison. In their marches they kept to the thoroughfares and highways, never entering the lanes or byways lest they should fall into (an) ambuscade; neither did they move under the walls of a city lest bricks or stones should be thrown at them by the people thereon. When they marched, it was always in a single file of great length, at a slow pace and in good order; by which means they occupied some miles of ground, and there was no approaching them. They could move rapidly for several tens of days together, and by opening out their body into four or five divisions they would manage to surround their enemy. When their forces were encamped opposite ours, they used to send one or two men who by alternately leaping up and crouching down contrived to exhaust our fire of stones and arrows. In an action with artillery they waited until their antagonists had fired; then they broke in on them impetuously and following up their advantage would drive them to a distance. In the heat of an engagement they would suddenly come forth from ambush on all sides and surround their enemy's flanks, by which manœuvre they forced our army to disperse in great consternation. They constantly resorted to strange stratagems, such as tying sheep together, or driving women on in front so as to perplex the beholder; the eyes of our people were dazzled by this, and the arms of the Japanese were thus enabled to take effect. They used the double sword exercise; with one sword they made feints above and struck with the other below, which rendered defence difficult. They hid the shafts or butt ends of their halberds and lances, and then, all of a sudden they would hurl them forth so that it was impossible to anticipate (the blow); their bows were long, their arrows large, and as they discharged them close, their shot was deadly. If they lay perdu, they had a marauding expedition in contemplation; if they spread a report abroad (so as to keep people on the alert) they were moving off. Thus they drew up their injured vessels across the stream to make a show of lying by, and straightway they sailed forth and invested Kinshán. At Shingshan they made ladders of bamboo to signify that they were about to storm it, and then they raised the siege. When they were going to take to the country, they pressed upon a city; if they had a march to make by land, they would provide themselves with oars. Sometimes they dug holes as pitfalls for their enemy; sometimes they plaited stubble to entangle him as he fled, or they stuck slips of bamboo in the ground to run into the feet of the fugitives. They used too to make a decoy of precious stones, cloth, gold, silver or women, by which they were enabled to inveigle our troops into ambuscades, and they were pleased when these lay in wait for them or pursued them. They gashed the faces of their prisoners of war, and tied their tongues to prevent it being detected by their answers that they were not Japanese; thus their return home was cut off. They showed great kindness to the people in the vicinity of their resorts, and were thus kept fully informed of the truth and falsehood of every report . . . They made handsome presents to such artisans as fell into their hands, and they were in consequence easily provided with arms. As they employed our people as spies, it is difficult on our side to ascertain (whence they got their information), and by using them as their guides, they became perfectly familiar with all the paths by which to advance or retreat. For their eating or sleeping they would stay in some place where they could break open the wall, and which was high enough for them to keep a look-out, so that there was no chance of taking them by surprise. Should they be closely beleaguered, they would leave some heads as a pretence and retire; some of them wrapping themselves in cloaks of the bamboo leaf and putting on bamboo hats would play the part of labourers in the fields; some in flowered silk handkerchiefs and shoes of cloth would swagger through the public places of the cities, thus placing our officials in the dilemma of killing the (wrong) robbers by mistake or honest men on suspicion.

Although fighting on the water was not at first their forte, they had the ingenuity to fasten empty vessels together, and to spread light screens over them by which (the fire or assault of) our forces advancing on them was expended; and they would abandon the women and leave money in the way to check us in the pursuit. The bulwarks and spars of their ships were all covered with cloths, quilts and cushions, which they damped to render them proof against fire. In an action, as soon as they came to close quarters, they boarded with rapidity; (their onset was) terrible as the thunder and (those on board) were scattered like the wind.

These pirates kidnapped our people to show them the road and to procure water for them, and as the latter went out in the morning and came home at night they called the roll of their names. At (or for) every place a register was kept in which they inserted their names and surnames, and they divided them into classes, according to which they told them off and inspected them.

There were but few native Japanese amongst them; not above some tens, of whom they formed the van. When the pirates returned to the island to which they belonged, they used to give out that they had come home from trading, and they never divulged aught concerning their comrades whom our troops had captured or slain, so that their neighbours knew nothing of it, but, on the contrary, offered them their congratulations.

P. 155. Extract from the Art of War. The Japanese do not construct their vessels in the same manner as the Chinese. They require beams of a large size and square, in fitting the seams of which they use no nails but band them together with iron plates. Neither do they make use of hempen rope or wood oil in closing their crevices but stop the leaks with sedge grass. Their ships cost much pains and money, and without a large capital it is not easy to build them. The pirates who attacked China were every one of them poor people from the islands, and what has been said in times past about the hundreds and thousands of ships built in Japan is an idle tradition. Their largest craft may carry three hundred men; the middle class one or two hundred, and the smallest from fifty to eighty. They are of a low and narrow build, and find it difficult to hold their own with such large vessels as they fall in with, and they are poorly off when they ground in the mud. For this cause our vessels from Kwángtun and Fuhkien are much feared by them, and particularly those of the former province as their sides are perpendicular like a wall.<sup>17</sup> Their ship's bottoms are flat and cannot easily cut the waves. Their canvas sails are set with the mast right in the middle and not one side of it as in China, and both their masts and sails shift about and are not made fast like those of the Chinese; hence they can only carry on with a fair breeze, and if they meet with a calm or a contrary wind they unship the mast and work the long stern scull; they cannot handle the oar. Their vessels could not (formerly) cross from Japan in less than a month, and if they now perform the voyage with greater ease it is because of the treachery of certain of the inhabitants of the coast of Fuhkien who bought ships in the outer waters, and when they had added a false bottom to them, brought over the Japanese in them. They had a sharp keel and were able to beat against the sea; in these they feared neither a head wind nor one on the quarter, and their sailing was so much improved that they could now make the passage in a few days.

P. 211. Extract from Chin Lunkiang. Collection of Particulars of Foreign States.<sup>15</sup> The pirates of the period Klátsing (c. 1540) were from Setungma. When Japan first sent trading vessels to Yungkiá eighteen Japanese fishermen were driven by the winds to China and induced by certain bad characters to commit acts of disorder. The latter trimmed their beards and shaved their heads (in Japanese fashion), mixed up in their speech the local dialect of some distant place, and thus confederated they robbed and plundered. Their gang was called the Wo Nú, Japanese slaves, but when they were at length taken there were but these eighteen men of Japan amongst them. The vessels of that country were thereupon prohibited from trading to China, but permission was given to ours (the Chinese) to go to Japan, and up to the present time (1730) no ship from it has ventured hither.

P. 215. Extract from the Huáng-tsing Tung-kau Sz'-i-mun or Book of the Four Barbarian Races. From the time of Shunchi (1644) there has been commercial intercourse with the Japanese, but they bring no tribute; the trade too is in Chinese vessels only, which went to Japan, none of her ships coming to China. The commerce with China is carried on at Chángki.

CAPTAIN JOHN DAVIS KILLED BY JAPANESE PIRATES, 1605.

In this extract from Purchas, it would be difficult, according to modern ideas, to decide which were the most piratical—the English or the Japanese. The former indeed held a regular commission and, according to the ideas of the day, it was not piratical to attack foreigners who had no treaty of peace or alliance with one's own country. Thus, Sir Edward Mitchelbourne narrates quite calmly how he plundered Chinese ships. The Japanese, at this period, judging by the absence of any distinction of rank amongst them, were probably pirates pure and simple. Superior force compelled them to allow the English to rummage their ship, which would certainly have been plundered if it had contained anything worth taking. Their policy was to lie low and to retaliate when they had put the English off their guard. They fought with the courage and resolution which has always characterized the Japanese and the surrender of the solitary survivor with the request to put him to death was in strict accordance with the Japanese code of honour. In all probability he expected to be tortured.

27th December 1605. " Here as I stood for Patane [East Coast, Malay Peninsula] about the twenty seven of December I met with a juncke of the Japons, which had been pyrating along the coast of China and Camboia [Cambodia]. Their Pilote being dead, with ignorance and foule weather they had cast away their shippe on the sholds of the great island of Borneo; and to enter into the country of Borneo they durst not: for the Japons are not suffered to land in any port in India with weapons: being accounted a people so desperate and daring that they are feared in all places where they come. These people, their shippe being splitted, with their shalops entred [i.e., boarded and captured] this juncke, wherein I met them, which was of Pátane, and killed all the people save one old Pilote. This juncke was laden with rice, which when they had possessed and furnished with such furniture necessaries and armes as they saved out of their sunken shippe, they shaped their course for Japan: but the badnesse of their juncke, contrarie winds and unseasonableness of the yeare forced them to leeward, which was the cause of mine unluckie meeting them. After I had haled them and made them come to leeward, sending my boat aboard them, I found them, by their men and furniture, very unproportionable for such a shippe as they were in; which was a juncke not above seventie tunnes in burthen, and they were ninetie men, and most of them in too gallant a habit for Saylers, and such an equalitie of behaviour among them, that they seemed all fellows [i.e., equals]; yet one among them there was that they called Capitaine, but gave him little respect. I caused them to come to an anchor and, upon further examination, I found their lading to be only rice: and for the most part spilt [i.e., spoiled] with wet: for their shippe was leakie both under and above water. Upon questioning them, I understood them to be men of warre, that had pillaged on the Coast of China and Cambola, and, as I said before, had cast away their shippe on the sholds of Borneo. Here wee road at anchor two dayes, entertayning them with good usage, not taking anything from them, thinking to have gathered by their knowledge, the place and passage of certaine shippes on the coast of China to have made my voyage.<sup>19</sup> But these Rogues,<sup>20</sup> being desperate in winds and fortunes, being hopelesse in that paltrie juncke ever to returne to their countrey, resolved with themselves either to gaine my shippe or to lose their lives. And upon mutuall courtesies with gifts and feastings betweene us, sometimes five and twentie or sixe and twentie of their chiefest came aboard; whereof I would not suffer above sixe to have weapons. There was never the like number of our men aboard their juncke. I willed Capitaine John Davis in the morning to possesse himselfe of their weapons, and to put the [Japanese] Companie before mast and to leave some guard on their weapons, while they [i.e., the English], searched in the rice, doubting that they by searching and by finding that which would dislike them [i.e., the Japanese], they might suddenly set upon my men and put them to the sword, as the sequell proved. Capitaine Davis being beguiled with their humble semblance, would not possesse himself of their weapons, though I sent twice of purpose from my shippe to will him to doe it. They passed all the day, my men searching in the rice and they looking on: at the Sonne-setting, after long search and nothing found save a little Storax and some Benjamin,<sup>21</sup> they, seeing opportunitie and talking to the rest of their Companie which were in my shippe, being neere to their juncke, they resolved at a watch-word betweene them, to set upon us resolutely in both shippes. This being concluded, they suddenly killed and drove over-board all my men that were in their shippe, and those which were aboard my shippe sallied out of my Cabbin, where they were put, with such weapons as they had, finding certaine targets in my Cabbin and other things that they used as weapons. My selfe, being aloft on the decke, knowing what was likely to follow, leapt into the waste, where with the Boate Swaines, carpenter and some few more, wee kept them under the halfe-decke. At their first comming forth of the Cabbin, they met Capitaine Davis comming out of the gun-roume, whom they pulled into the Cabbin, and giving him six or seven mortall wounds, they thrust him out of the Cabbin before them. His wounds were so mortall that he dyed as soone as he came into the waste. They pressed so fiercely to come to us, as wee, receiving them on our pikes, they would gather on our pikes [i.e., drag themselves along the pikes] with their hands to reach us with their swords. It was neere halfe an houre before wee could stone [sic] them backe into the Cabbin: in which time wee had killed three or foure of their leaders. After they were driven into the Cabbin, they fought with us at the least foure houres before wee could suppress them, often fying the Cabbin, burning the bedding and much other stuffe that was there. And had wee not with two demy-culverings from under the half-decke beaten down the bulke head and the pompe [!] of the shippe, wee could not have suppressed them from burning the shippe. This ordnance, being charged with crosse-barres, bullets and case-shot, and bent close to the hulke-head, so violently marred therewith boords and splinters, that it left but one of them standing of two and twentie. Their legs, armes and bodies were so torne as it was strange to see how the shot had massacred them. In all this conflict they never would desire their lives, though they were hopelesse to escape: such was the desperatenesse of these Japonians. Only one leapt over-boord, which afterward swamme to our shippe again and asked for grace. Wee took him in and asked him what was their purpose? He told us that they meant to take our shippe and to cut all our throates. He would say no more but desired that he might be cut in pieces.

"The next day, to wit, the eight and twentieth of December, wee went to a little island to the leeward of us. And when wee were about five miles from the land the Generall [Sir Edward Mitchelbourne] commanded his people to hang this Japonian: but he brake the rope and fell into the sea. I cannot tell whether he swamme to the land or not."

JAPANESE DESTROY A SPANISH SHIP, 1640.

In 1636-7 the Japanese, incensed at the insolent and violent behaviour of the Portuguese and their Christian converts, having massacred the latter, closed their ports to Portuguese ships and forbade all trade. Portuguese ambassadors sent to Japan in 1640 were executed, Spain, being then under the same crown as Portugal, Spanish vessels were included in this prohibition; in spite of which and of their own infamous behaviour to the Japanese, one of their ships ventured into Nagasaki, with the result so vividly described by Kaempfer. The action of the Japanese may be looked upon as a proper assertion of national rights or as a justifiable reprisal, but on the other hand it may be regarded as contrary to international law—then much more vague than now—and therefore, from the place where it was committed, as an instance of official piracy.

The Castilians, for so the Japanese call all Spaniards, took a Japanese junk near Manila, and sunk it with all on board, thinking that by this means they would extinguish the memory of so barbarous an action. However the Japanese Government obtained word of it. About a year after a Spanish three-decked ship, which had been fitted out in the Philippines for Japan, cast anchor in the harbour of Nagasaki, of which the authorities informed the Court. Thereupon the Prince of Arima received the Emperor's orders to burn the ship with its goods and crew. The Spaniards were warned by some of their friends and by persons who did not wish them to perish that the thunderbolt was about to fall on their heads and that they should hasten to avoid the danger by a speedy flight. But at first their avarice and then contrary winds prevented their following this salutary counsel. All they could do was to work day and night loading their ship with silver and gold and the valuable merchandise of Japan, filling their vessel as full as it could hold, and then they prepared themselves to depart or to defend themselves against anyone who should attack them. However, the Prince of Arima, appointed to put the Emperor's orders into execution, arrived in the harbour with a great number of boats full of soldiers. The Spanish ship was immediately surrounded and, the wind being still contrary, it was impossible to open a passage by which to escape the enemy. The Spaniards finding themselves in this extremity, took the unanimous resolution to sell their lives dearly and that the Japanese should find that it was not as easy as they thought to take and burn their ship. The Prince of Arima, on his side did all he could, encouraging the soldiers by his presence and by promises of reward if they attacked the ship bravely, but seeing that no one was willing to take the first risk, was himself the first to leap on board the ship and was immediately followed by so large a number of his soldiers that the deck was covered by them. Thereupon the Spaniards withdrew below the deck and closed the hatchways after them. The Prince, suspecting some design in this and fearing some nasty trick, leapt back into his boat as if to call up more soldiers, and, a moment after, the Spaniards set fire to some barrels of powder which they had placed under the deck, blowing into the air all the Japanese who were upon it. The first attack having failed, the Prince ordered up fresh troops to board a second time, and the Spaniards retiring under the second deck blew it up in the same manner. So also they did with the third deck when the Japanese attacked the third time, the Spaniards having retired to the bottom of the hold. By these repeated explosions the harbour was covered with the bruised, wounded and dead bodies of Japanese soldiers, before the rest could actually attack the Spaniards, who defended themselves with the greatest bravery for some hours, refusing to surrender, until they were killed to the last man. This combat, in which more than 3000 Japanese were killed, lasted six hours. Later on an incredible amount of treasure was found where the ship sank, and it is said that more than 3000 boxes of silver were fished up. This is the story given by my Japanese author, who says that only a few years ago [written 1690] divers brought up some silver from this place.

THE LAKSHMANASENA ERA.

By N. G. MAJUMDAR, B.A. ; CALCUTTA.

IN this paper I do not propose to discuss all the points concerning this era. I shall here confine my attention chiefly to the question whether the era used in some Bodh-Gayā inscriptions is the same as the Lakshmanā-saṃvat of A.D. 1119, and whether there is any ground for supposing that this era did not originate in the reign of Lakshmanasena.

The Bodh-Gayā inscriptions in question are the three records dated in the post-regnal years of king Lakshmanasena, i.e. years counted from the initial point of his reign, even when it had passed away; they are the two well-known epigraphs of the time of Aśoka-challa,<sup>1</sup> and one of Jayasena<sup>2</sup> which has recently been discovered at a place close to Bodh-Gayā. The dates of these three inscriptions are expressed as follows:—

- I. Śrīmal-Lakṣṇa(ka)ma(ka)-senasy — ātīta-rājye Saṃ 51.
- II. Śrīmal-Lakṣṇa(ka)masenadevapādānām — ātīta-rājye Saṃ 74.
- III. Lakṣṇa(ka)masenasy — ātīta-rājye Saṃ 83.

From the above it will be seen that the three dates are expressed in a uniform manner so far as their wording is concerned. Regarding I and II Kielhorn came to the conclusion that the years 51 and 74 which they contain, should be referred to the era of Lakshmaṇasena or Lakshmaṇa-saṃvat, in which are dated numbers of MSS. discovered in this country, and which according to the calculation of that learned savant, was started from October 7, A.D. 1119.<sup>2</sup> His inference, it is necessary to point out, was drawn from the astronomical calculations based upon the data supplied by the colophons of MSS. dated in the aforesaid era. Kielhorn clearly pointed out that if the dates of the MSS. be referred to an era the initial point of which lay before A.D. 1119, all the dates, including even that of inscription II, referred to above, could not be properly worked out; but, if they be referred to the era of A.D. 1119, they all would work out most satisfactorily. This itself should have been considered sufficient for the identification of the era associated with the name of Lakshmaṇasena in these inscriptions (two of which have long since been known to us), with the era known as the Lakshmaṇa-saṃvat, or in an abbreviated form, as La-saṃ. But some scholars, the most prominent among whom are Messrs. Ramāprasād Chanda and Nagendra Nāth Vasu, have rejected Kielhorn's theory and maintained that not one but two eras were associated with the name of this Sena king. It has, therefore, become necessary to reopen the question here, and offer my own views on the subject for what they are worth.

The views of Messrs. Chanda and Vasu, which are almost identical, are embodied in their works, the Gauḍa-rājamāla (Rājshāhi, 1319 B.S.), pp. 64-5,<sup>3</sup> and Baṅger Jātīya Itihāsa (Calcutta, 1321 B.S.), pp. 347-52. According to both of them, the years specified in epigraphs I and II, though associated with an era bearing the name of Lakshmaṇasena, should not be referred to the Lakshmaṇa-saṃvat of A.D. 1119; in other words, they contend that we should suppose the existence of two different eras started at two different periods and bearing the name of Lakshmaṇasena. By the clause Lakshmaṇasenasy-ātīta-rājye Saṃ is meant the year of an era started from the termination of the reign of the king, and according to them this is to be put down about A.D. 1200. Thus the year 74 of inscription II, for instance, would correspond to A.D. 1274 and not A.D. 1193 as Kielhorn calculated. From inscription I, Mr. R. D. Banerji concluded with Kielhorn that the reign of Lakshmaṇasena came to an end before A.D. 1170,<sup>4</sup> apparently because the inscription refers to the rājya as atīta or passed away. He accepted the identity of the era of this and the cognate inscription (No. II), where also the word atīta occurs, with the era of A.D. 1119. But, according to Messrs. Chanda and Vasu, Lakshmaṇasena lived up to the time of the Muhammadan invasion (circa A.D. 1200) when he lost his kingdom. From A.D. 1200 was counted the atīta-rājya era of Lakshmaṇasena. According to Mr. Chanda the other era, viz. the La-saṃ of A.D. 1119, though counted from that year (by a process of backward calculation?), was a much later invention. In other words, according to that scholar, it was not originated as a matter of fact in the year 1119. When did it then actually come into vogue?—and the same scholar replies, this was so when the atīta-rājya era started from A.D. 1200 fell into disuse, and there was necessity for a fresh era to fill up its place. The main evidence<sup>5</sup> that has led him to postulate this theory is the so-called palæographic consideration according to which he finds it difficult, nay even impossible, to refer inscriptions I and II to the twelfth or the first part of the thirteenth century A.D. The same palæographic consideration also compels him to assume that the Gayā stone inscription of 1232 V.E.—A.D. 1175, which was

executed in the fourteenth year of Govindapāla,<sup>7</sup> is much earlier in date than inscription I of the year 51. Before proceeding to discuss the very possibility of this theory I must examine the evidence of the palæography of the inscriptions, as Mr. Chanda lays much stress on it, and declares it to be of a very highly convincing character.

The palæographic consideration of Mr. Chanda is chiefly based on the examination of the two test letters d and p occurring in the following six inscriptions: the Bodh-Gayā inscriptions I and II of the time of Aśokachalla; the Gayā stone inscription, dated 1232 V.E.—A.D. 1175; the Edilpur grant of Viśvarūpasena; a Chittagong grant, dated A.D. 1243; and the Assam grant of Vallabhadeva, dated A.D. 1184-5. Now, for a comparative study of letters which may be of any practical use for determining dates, it is not desirable that we should mix up inscriptions incised on different materials, e.g., stone, copper, etc., or inscriptions though on the same material, yet connected with different localities far removed from one another by long distances. This procedure, I may say, is certainly, what may be called 'scientific' and that it is so, is clearly borne out by such an expert epigraphist as the late Dr. Fleet, who has made similar remarks in another connection (JRAS., 1913, pp. 975-6). In view of this general principle of palæography I am compelled to reject the last three inscriptions of the above list, for, they are, in the first instance, all copper-plates and therefore, not calculated to furnish any reliable data with regard to the palæography of stone inscriptions; and secondly, inscriptions discovered in Dacca, Chittagong or Assam cannot be brought in a line with inscriptions discovered in Bihar. The real comparison of letters that might be safely instituted therefore, is virtually confined to the first three records which are all on stone and belong to one and the same locality. Now, according to Mr. Chanda, the letters p and d in the Gayā stone inscription represent the old Nāgarī type and those in epigraphs I and II almost resemble the modern Bengali specimens of the same letters. I quite agree with this observation, but cannot endorse the opinion, that the aforesaid appearances of letters only would justify us to fix in any way the age of the inscriptions, viz., that Nos. I and II are later in date than the Gayā stone inscription. One characteristic of the palæography of North-East India inscriptions from circa A.D. 1050 onwards is that they contain a mixture of Nāgarī and later Bengali forms. Curiously enough, we find the Nāgarī and the later Bengali forms of some letters used side by side not only at one and the same period but also at one and the same locality. Let us take, for instance, the case of letters v, l and s. The v of the Bodh-Gayā inscription of the year 51 has practically no difference with a Bengali v of our own period. But strange to say, in the inscriptions of the years 74 and 83, the letter clearly represents its Nāgarī prototype. Exactly similar is the case of the letter l which is proto-Bengali in the first, and Nāgarī in the second and third, inscriptions. Again in inscription I we have a Nāgarī s, in inscription II it is of proto-Bengali type, but in inscription III which is ex hypothesi later than II the old Nāgarī type is again met with. The case of the two letters d and p is also not different. In inscription I, d represents an advanced type of the letter, and there is a close resemblance between this and modern Bengali d. In the Gayā stone inscription referred to above, the d is doubtless of the Nāgarī type; but then, this type we also notice in inscriptions II and III. With regard to the letter p, it must be admitted that the proto-Bengali type alone occurs in the three Bodh-Gayā inscriptions of the years 51, 74 and 83. But, from this if we infer that the Nāgarī p was not in general use in the locality during this period, we shall commit a serious mistake, because, in a Gayā inscription,<sup>8</sup> which like inscriptions I and II, refers itself to the reign of Aśokachalla and is likewise on stone, there is to be found the Nāgarī p throughout. The above considerations are, in my opinion, instructive, and enough to prove the futility of such a procedure as the one followed by Mr. Chanda. It will thus be agreed that there remain no reasonable palaeographic grounds for saying that the Bodh-Gayā inscription of the year 51 is later than the Gayā stone inscription of Govindapāla.

Let us now proceed to discuss the possibilities of there being two different eras bearing the name of the same king. The résumé of the views of Mr. Chanda, which has been given above, will show that he has committed himself to one important assumption, viz., that the two eras were never current side by side—one was succeeded by the other. According to his theory, the three dates 51, 74 and 83 of inscriptions I, II and III would correspond to the years A.D. 1251, 1274 and 1283 respectively. Therefore, if the La-saṃ came into vogue after the allta-rājya era had ceased to exist, it must necessarily have been so after A.D. 1283; it cannot be said to have flourished before this date. But is it really a fact that there is no date earlier than A.D. 1283 which is expressed in the Lakshmapa-saṃvat? Now, in the colophon of a MS. belonging to the Durbar Library, Nepal, noticed by M. M. Haraprasād Sāstri, its date has been expressed as follows: La-saṃ 91 Chaitra. Vadi Gurau.<sup>9</sup> The date which is herein expressed is the year 91 of La-saṃ corresponding to A.D. 1210. This year, therefore, which is expressed in La-saṃ, precedes all the three dates, viz., 1251, 1274 and 1283. Thus, the theory that the La-saṃ came into vogue after the so-called Mṛityu-saṃvat had ceased to exist, at once falls to the ground. Again, if we take the two eras as separate we are driven to the conclusion that they were flourishing side by side from at least about A.D. 1210 to 1283. Thus two eras started from different years but going under the name of the same king, were being employed by the people at one and the same period—a view which is prima facie untenable, and as such will, I am afraid, commend itself to very few scholars.

But this is not all. There is also evidence of a definite character which goes straight against the theory that the era of the inscriptions was started from A.D. 1200. Now, the most important data that can finally settle the question at issue are, of course, those that are furnished by astronomical calculation. In inscription II, dated 74, there are fortunately enough the following details of a date:—

According to the calculation of Kielhorn, who referred the date to the era of A.D. 1119, it corresponded to Thursday, the 19th May, A.D. 1194. The question that now arises therefore, is: whether the above details tally in the case of the year A.D. 1274 which corresponds to the year 74, according to Messrs. Chanda and Vasu, i.e., whether the 12th तिथि of Vaisākha vadi falling in the year A.D. 1274, was a Thursday? As a matter of fact, however, it was not so, and according to the calculation of Dewan Bahadur L. D. Swamikannu Pillai, this detail does not tally with any year between A.D. 1272 and 1277.<sup>10</sup> In this period there is no year whose 12th तिथि of Vaisākha vadi is a Thursday. It is clear, therefore, that the year 74, and, consequently, the years 51 and 83, cannot be referred, on pure astronomical grounds, to an era having for its initial year A.D. 1200 (or even one or two years earlier).

Let us now consider the exact meaning and force of the expression Lakshmapasenasya = allta-rājya Saṃ, and see whether it in any way supports the theory of Messrs. Chanda and Vasu. The question that arises here is: whether a regnal and a post-regnal year of a king can be expressed in identical language if we want to express them in extenso. The full expression of a regnal date in words would be, e.g., as follows: Lakshmanasenasya rājye or pravarddhamāna-vijaya-rājye Saṁ. But if we are asked to express fully a post-regnal year of the king, what have we to do? Surely, the above expression will not serve our purpose. There must undoubtedly be alteration of the wording of the date. Of course, pravarddhamāna or some such phrase cannot be tolerated; but, even if we score it out and retain only rājye it will also lead to a confusion. For, this might give rise to the idea that in both the years, regnal and post-regnal, the king was actually ruling! To avoid such a confusion it will be necessary to clearly indicate that the reign of the king had passed away, but that the era started from the date of his accession, was being continued. And we have already indicated that our intention is to express it in extenso. Hence the word rājya by itself will not do and we must use some other additional word to show that this rājya or reign had already passed away. The only appropriate phrase that can be employed in the circumstances is some such as atita-rājye.<sup>11</sup> It can only mean, in the past reign, i.e., in the reign (now) passed as Kielhorn suggested. It can never mean, as some scholars no doubt suppose, so many years elapsed since the atita-rājya which word being in the locative cannot give rise to the sense of ablative ('since').<sup>12</sup> As regards the propriety of this expression the following words of Kielhorn may be well quoted: "During the reign of Lakshmanasena the years of his (Lakshmanasena's) reign would be described as Śrīmaṭ-Lakshmanasena-dēvapādānām rājye (or pravarddhamāna-vijaya-rājye) samvat: after his death the phrase would be retained, but atita prefixed to the word rājye, to show that, although the years were still continued from the commencement of the reign of Lakshmanasena, that reign itself was a thing of the past. In the course of time atita-rājye is apt to become a meaningless phrase, as may be seen from the Śrīmaṭ Vikramāditya-dēvapādānām — atita-rājye Saṁ 1503 in Mr. Bendall's Catalogue of Buddh. Skr. MSS., p. 70"—ante, Vol. XIX, p. 2, note 3.

I shall now examine another theory, viz., that according to which the initial point of the era, though it is counted from A.D. 1118, does not fall in his reign, but in that of his predecessor. According to some scholars it originated with the reign of Sāmantasena,<sup>13</sup> according to others with that of Hemantasena;<sup>14</sup> while there is yet a third view according to which we should look upon Vijayasena as the founder of the era.<sup>15</sup> Mr. R. D. Banerji has already made a very relevant remark, that the era which was all along associated with his name, cannot be reasonably ascribed to the reign of any one of his predecessors.<sup>17</sup> Hitherto, the earliest testimony of the origin of the era was believed to have been the Akbar-nama of Abul-Fazl which was compiled about the middle of the 16th century A.D. It records a current tradition that the era was started from the year of Lakshmanasena's accession. It may here be contended that the Dacca image inscription<sup>18</sup> discovered by Mr. Banerji furnishes earlier testimony, because it mentions the Saṁvat 3 of Lakshmanasena, which shows that the first year of the era falls within the reign of that king. But, I am afraid, it is by no means the only conclusion deducible from the expression Śrīmal-Lakshmanasenasya saṁvat 3. It can also mean simply "in the third regnal year of the king" without necessarily having any reference to the era started by him. Therefore, we do not get any definite clue as to the origin of the era from this inscription. Let us turn, therefore, our attention to the colophons of MSS. dated in this era. Now, in one of them we find the expression: abde Lakshmanasena-bhūpati-mate,<sup>19</sup> which can only mean, "in the era which was approved (mata), i.e., started by king Lakshmanasena."<sup>20</sup> The date of this MS. is La-saṁ 293 = A.D. 1412. It is thus a century and a half earlier than Abul Fazl and is therefore, the earliest known evidence about the origin of the era. And, according to this also, Lakshmanasena is regarded as its founder. I have shown before that the theory that the era was started after the reign of Lakshmanasena has no ground to stand upon. Likewise, as we now see, it could not have originated in any reign previous to his own.

<sup>11</sup> In some seven manuscripts and one inscription we have similar phrases, e.g., Gocindopāladēvānā-mgata-rājye chaturdasa-samvatsare, to express the dates in which they were written. Mr. Banerji and others contend that these expressions should not be interpreted like the date-wordings of the Bodhi-Gaya inscriptions referred to above. I, however, cannot subscribe to it. My own views regarding them will be published in a subsequent issue of this Journal.

<sup>12</sup> In the Sonpur plates of Kumāra Someśvaradeva, Ep. Ind., Vol. XII, p. 240, which were executed in his first regnal year, we have Abhimanyude (de)vasyātita-rājye by which it is evidently meant that they were issued in the 'passed reign' of his predecessor Abhimanyudeva. This certainly lends support to Kielhorn's interpretation of attorājye.

Thus, what I have set forth in this paper will all go to support Kielhorn and those scholars who share in his opinion. I have shown (1) that there is absolutely no need of assuming two Lakshmanasena eras; (2) that the era of A.D. 1119 was not a later innovation having nothing to do with Lakshmanasena; (3) that it was not started to fill up the place of an imaginary 'death-era' of the king; (4) that the expression atitā-rājye Saṁ which has been incorrectly taken to yield the sense of a death-era is but the only natural form of fully expressing a post-regnal date; (5) that even if we imagine the existence of such an era it cannot, at any rate, be counted from A.D. 1200, because this cannot be supported on astronomical grounds; and (6) that the earliest tradition about the origin of the era, handed down to us through manuscripts, points to Lakshmanasena as its founder, and there is no evidence for fathering it on any one of his predecessors.

BOOK-NOTICE.

THE DREAM QUEEN, a translation of the Svapna-vāśavedattā of Bhāsa, by A. G. SHERRIFF AND PANNA LALL. The Indian Press, Allahabad, 1918.

This is a metrical translation of one of Bhāsa's best plays, the discovery of which has made famous the name of M. M. Pandit Ganapati Śāstri of Trivandrum. The short introduction of the translators gives a summary of the discoverer's arguments as to the date of the author and touches briefly on the plot and compares it with the earliest romantic drama of the West, the Alceste of Euripides.

Though the translation is a metrical one, it is generally faithful. But the translators have followed an English model and not that of the original in so far as they omitted the Prastāvanā and rendered even the prose portions of the original in verse. Thus they have presented this old Sanskrit play in a modern English garb; and credit must be given to them for their success. As a specimen we quote the following soliloquy of Vidū-shaka (the original of which is in prose) :—

I thank my lucky stars that I have seen
This rare old time of mirth and merry-making
For the long-wished for wedding of my lord,
The Vatsa king. Why, bless me! who'd have thought it?
When we had been soused over head and ears
In such a whirlpool of calamity,
Who would have thought we ever should emerge?
And now, I bask on palace balconies,
Loll by the fountains in the ladies' court,
Eat the most toothsome and delicious dainties,—
In short, I live in an elysium,
With nothing missing but the heavenly nymphs
But there's one drawback, and a dreadful one :—
This diet plays the deuce with my digestion.
I cannot sleep upon a bed of down
For these distempered humours in my vitals,
Ugh! 'Tis no joke, I tell you, to endure
These griping pains. I can't enjoy my breakfast.

THE COMFORT'S FIGHT WITH MALABAR PIRATES, 1638.

The Malabar pirates infested the Indian coast from Mangalore to Cape Comorin. They comprised Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians, the last mentioned including European renegades, Portuguese and European half-castes. They were the subjects of petty princes or chiefs, nominally subordinate to the Mughal or, later, to the Marâthâs. To these chiefs the pirates paid a fixed share of their booty in return for ships, arms and provisions, though, in some cases they received a regular wage for the voyage and a monthly stipend in the off season instead of booty. Their sole object was plunder and their prisoners were almost invariably reserved for ransom, such ill-treatment as they received being due to the necessity of guarding against escape or to callous indifference to suffering rather than to intentional cruelty. In Europe every little Prince or State owning a mile of sea-coast claimed the right to issue commissions to privateers, whom it was impossible to distinguish from pirates, and the petty Indian chiefs claimed an immemorial right to issue passes to all ships which sailed by their shores and to punish, by forfeiture of goods and cargo, refusal or neglect to purchase these passes, for which indeed they demanded but a paltry price. The enforcement of this claim, and the further claim to seize the cargoes of all wrecks, European traders considered to be piracy, and resisted whenever they were able, whilst the local Governments of the English, French, Dutch and Portuguese tried to force native Indian vessels to carry passes which they themselves issued. It was a pretty game but not one to be commended.

A letter from John Mountney, dated 27th November 1638 (India Office Records, O. C. 1651) says that at this time there were twenty Malabar pirate vessels at sea, and that they approached their intended victims under the white flag (the use of which was well known in Asia as early as we have any record) and then suddenly attacked. This was the case in the attack on the Comfort.

"November the 16th being in the latitude of 11d. 20m, and in 13 fathom wee were chased by nine sayle of Friggotts from six in the morning untill eight before they came within shott of us, after which time they kept theyr distance untill twelve at noone, then falling flat calme; in so much they perceived our shippe could not work any way with her sayles they handed theyr sayles and immediately rew [rowed] all together on board us and lashed fast notwithstanding wee placed every shott into them and spoyled [hurt] many of theyr people.

"Being lashed on board, they entred theyr men in abundance, the which wee used all meanes possible to cleare, but, finding them so resolutely bent and still encreasing so abundantly, I resolved to blow up our upper deck, and effected it with the losse of not one of our people, yet some hurt, and divers of theirs, namely the Mallabars, slayne and maimed.

"This seemed little or nothing to diminish or quell theyr courage but wee still continued to defend the opposing enemy by murthuring and wounding each other, they being so resolute that they would not step aside from the muzzell of our ordnance when wee fired upon them, but immediately being fired heaved in whole bucketts of water, in so much that in the conclusion wee were forced to betake ourselves to the Gun-Deck, upon which wee had but two pieces of ordnance. They then cutting with axes the deck over our heads, and hearing the hideous noyse and cry of such a multitude, thought how to contrive away to send them all to theyr greate adorer Belzebub, which was by firing all our powder at one blast,<sup>21</sup> as many of us as were left alive leaping into the sea, yet intercepted ( some ) by those divellish helhounds.

" Wee were at that present English 23, being all wounded foure excepted, blacks 4 and Javaes 4 : slayne English 5, Javaes 3 and blacks 13 : all which were then living they tooke into theyr Friggotts and carried us on shoare about 24 houres after, where wee, the English, wanted all thinges whatsoever, irons, hunger and cold only excepted ; the manner of our then present estate would be but prolix to write and therefore omitted.

" During all this time of our encounter, which was from 8 in the morning untill 4 in the afternoone, there was not more than three leagues distance from us a Dutch shippe, which could not by any meanes assist us, in regard of its being calme, yet at 6 or 7 in the evening in our lee came fayre by the shippe burning, and so she continued, the enemy not gaining ought that belonged to the Honble. Company, but was enforced to leave her with the losse of more than 1400 men."<sup>22</sup>

THE PIRATE COXINGA TAKES FORMOSA FROM THE DUTCH, 1661.

In 1624 the Dutch gave up their settlement in the Pescadores and, with the permission of the Japanese, settled at Taywan [Tai-uan],<sup>23</sup> in the Island of Formosa. Here in 1634 they built a fort which they named Fort Zeelandia. The Japanese soon found it advisable to retire and the Dutch made themselves masters of the whole island. In this position they found it necessary to take action against the Chinese pirates. In 1626 the leader of these was one Chin-chi-lung who collected a large fleet and made himself master of the seas. When trapped and killed by the Chinese authorities in 1646, he was succeeded by one Chin-ching-kung, known to the Europeans by the Portuguese version of his name viz. Coxinga. He had been a tailor at Taywan in Dutch employ and had been baptized under the name of Nicholas Gaspard, but dissatisfied with his treatment by the Dutch, he turned pirate. Finding that he could not establish himself in China itself and full of animosity against the Dutch, he formed the project of seizing the Island of Formosa. This he succeeded in doing in the year 1661. How he did so is told by Gautier van Schouten, who was in the Dutch East Indies at the time. Coxinga behaved with especial cruelty to the native converts and to the Dutch pastors, but such cruelty was characteristic of the Chinese pirates. It was exhibited as fiercely against their own countrymen as against foreigners; and, it is only fair to say, met with equally cruel reprisals.

During and after the Tartar invasion, pillaging and piracy, disorders on land and sea continued incessantly throughout China, as there were always two factions at war with each other. At last the remainder of the party which had been defeated on land betook itself to sea under the command of a famous pirate named Chinchilung or Yquion. He soon found himself master of a great fleet, and at the head of several valiant corsairs, that is, if corsairs deserve that the quality of valour should be ascribed to them.

This fleet having engaged sometimes in piracy, sometimes in trade or private affairs, all together or in parts as occasion required, the forces of Chinchilung increased to such an extent that he quickly got together 3000 vessels. This formidable power filling him with audacity he formed the design of seizing the Empire, but the Tartars, more cunning than he, having enticed him ashore with the greater part of his men, defeated and took him prisoner and sent him to Peking, where they put him to death by poison.

Coxinga, who had been his lieutenant and second in command, took his place, though he came originally from the very dregs of the people, having been a tailor at Taiovan [an Island on the S.E. coast of Formosa] where the Sieur Putman [Hans Putmans] had employed him as such. Later he turned pirate and, having pulled off some considerable coups, acquired a high reputation which placed him in the position which he now occupied.

He hated our nation, which had often interfered with his piratical undertakings and given him some sufficiently important checks, for which he was looking out for an opportunity of revenge. Accordingly he equipped some hundreds of junks, some of which mounted forty guns and all were well manned and carried a number of soldiers. With this force he left the coast of China in order to land at Taiovan.

In Formosa there had occurred several portents of this misfortune. In the month of January, 1661 there took place a furious earthquake which caused all the mountains in the island to crumble and threw down thirty-one houses at Taiovan. The thick walls of Fort Zeelandia were cracked in several places and in others had fallen down. Three vessels in the harbour were tossed about in an extraordinary manner. The waves of the sea were raised to such a height that they looked like mountains and it appeared as if they would overwhelm the island. These tremors could be felt six weeks later though always diminishing in force. It is true that they had often occurred before in Formosa, but never before had they lasted so long or been so violent.

On the 15th April, 1661 at midnight terrible noises were heard on one of the bastions of Fort Zeelandia, named Middelburg, which waked up all of the soldiers who were asleep. Every one rushed to his arms and then towards the place from which the noises came; but look as they might, nothing could be seen. This incident caused extraordinary surprise.

There were three vessels at anchor in the Roads of Baxamboi, which, an hour before daylight, were seen from the land to be on fire and in flames which burst out again and again as if a cannon were being fired, but no reports were heard. On the other hand those who were on board saw the same take place in Fort Zeelandia. At daylight all these phenomena disappeared.

On the 29th April about mid-day there was seen, in front of the new works, a man who rose up three times out of the water and for the third time disappearing was seen no more. About mid-day beneath the Holland bastion there was seen a Siren with long blond locks of hair, who also showed himself three times. There were also several other portents which are thought to have been messengers of the approaching misfortune.

On the morning of the 30th April, as a great fog, which hid the horizon, began to clear, one saw from Fort Zeelandia that the sea was covered with vessels, a forest of masts. This great force was divided into three squadrons. The first, passing in front of Fort Zeelandia, cast anchor three leagues to the south. The second went north to the pass of Lagimoi which lies between Formosa and the long and narrow bank of Baxamboi. The third remained in the same place in which the whole fleet had been first seen, about a cannon-shot from the Dutch vessels in the Roads.

Soon after, the troops being landed spread on all sides, committing all sorts of hostilities, as well against the Chinese themselves and the Islanders as against the Dutch, and putting everything to fire and sword. Four hundred men, who had been sent to reinforce the garrison of Zijkam [Sakkam], being overtaken and defeated by the enemy, some of those who were not killed got into the Fort and others by swimming got back to Fort Zeelandia.

The enemy, laying siege to Fort Zijkam, cut off the water supply and battered the Fort, which at first was valiantly defended, but the besieged, soon losing courage on account of the smallness of their forces and the want of provisions and water, surrendered at discretion on the 4th of May. The treatment given them was what might be expected from brutal and inhuman people who made them suffer all that one can in the most cruel captivity.

However as soon as the fleet was seen, Captain Thomas Pedel, sailing from Fort Zeelandia with some men, erected three batteries in the outskirts to command the shore. The next morning his son was brought to him with one of his arms cut off, the enemy having caught him with his tutor whom they had murdered. This gallant gentleman, wild with grief, begged of the Governor Sieur Coyet [Frederik Coyett] for permission to take two companies to look for the assassins. Having obtained it he marched along the shore supported by some little vessels which hugged the coast and had small guns.

The Chinese, seeing him coming, sent against him a whole army in order of battle, and after a short cannonade an engagement took place. The enemy came from all sides, the ground being covered by them, uttering furious cries and flashing their daggers and long swords. Pedel defended himself valiantly and made a great slaughter, but at last, overwhelmed by the prodigious number of his assailants, he and most of his people were killed. The remainder of the two hundred men whom he had commanded and who were not more than eighty, threw themselves into the water, and by the help of the little vessels or by swimming got back into the fort.

During this fight on land the three ships Hector, Gravelande and Marie were, according to the orders they had received, fighting at sea. But the powder on the Hector catching fire and blowing her up with more than 100 men, of whom not one escaped, the two others found themselves too weak to continue the fight and withdrew under the cannon of the Fort.

Moreover our people obtained no assistance from either the Islanders or the Chinese who had settled on the island, most of them having taken fright and fled and the remainder, unable to resist so great a force, submitted.

The enemy meeting with no resistance in the island penetrated everywhere and took all the little forts in it, putting to the sword everyone they found in arms, and even free women, slaves and children. They spared no one, neither priests nor officers, neither old people nor people of rank. Next Coxinga laid siege to Zeelandia and, having closely surrounded it, sent in a pastor, named Antoine Hambroek or Hambrouc, who had been made prisoner, to tell the Governor that if he would surrender he should have good quarter, but that in case of refusal he would not spare even the infants at the breast nor the prisoners he had taken or should take in the future.

Neither the Governor nor any other person amongst the besieged was inclined to listen to the deceitful offers of the enemy, and Pastor Hambrouc, who had left his wife and some of his children in their hands, could not make up his mind to abandon them. He made a last farewell to two of his daughters who were in the Fort, one of them being married to an officer. One can easily imagine how cruel and pathetic was such a parting. It was in fact a last adieu, for the Pastor and his son and the other prisoners were soon afterwards decapitated, as well as Pierre Mus [?Mazins], Pastor of Favorlang [?Kelang], and Winshernius, Pastor of Zijkam. Some of them saw their wives violated before their eyes and then cut in pieces with swords. Other women after being violated were given to the Islanders as slaves. In short there was no barbarity or infamy which was not exercised on this occasion.

Governor Coyet, fearing that the two vessels which were left would be taken, sent the Gravelande to Kielang and the Marie to Batavia, where on its arrival the squadron mentioned above was fitted out (i.e., ten ships under Jacob Cacuw).

The enemy having pressed our people so closely that they were forced to abandon the town, they retired in all haste into the Fort with their cannon and set on fire the houses which were nearest to it. But the Chinese, who followed them up closely, extinguished the fire and saved and plundered all they could, and immediately filled with earth and sand the sugar boxes which they found, using them to entrench the streets. They raised cavaliers with batteries upon them; threw a quantity of fireworks; battered the Fort from several sides, after the return of Pastor Hambrouc, and hoped to make a breach, but in this they were disappointed.

On the contrary the besieged made a sortie and spiked the guns of the besiegers. They also made play with their mortars, and the Chinese, who had never before seen anything like them, ran to the places where the grenades were falling and were wounded by them. One of their Mandarins or Colonels, having been accused of cowardice, had his head cut off.

Herman Clenck [who had been sent to Taiovan as President and Commandant] having arrived at Taiovan and having unloaded a part of what he had with him was forced to go on to Japan. The enemy, continuing their attacks, made two new batteries at Baxamboi, whither up till then the besieged had been able to go to bury their dead, and in this way the Fort was battered on all sides.

On the 9th August twelve Dutch vessels appeared and this great reinforcement made our people hope that the Chinese would raise the siege. They were the ships which General Cacuw brought from Batavia. But it is in vain that men count upon their own forces if it does not please God to bless their designs. Scarcely had this agreeable sight struck the eyes of the besieged; scarcely had the twelve ships cast anchor when there arose a terrible tempest, which obliged them to cut their cables and run out to sea, where the ships were carried to such a distance that the besieged lost all hope of anything like speedy succour, besides which a flyboat named the Urck having grounded, fell into the hands of the Chinese, who by this means got full information of the condition and forces of the squadron.

At length the other vessels returned and disembarked men and provisions. Five of them posted themselves in the harbour behind the town, in order to enfilade the streets. But the entrenchments had been so well made that instead of annoying the enemy, our vessels were so troubled by their batteries that they were forced to retire. In carrying out this manœuvre the Kouackerke also grounded and immediately afterwards was set on fire by the fireworks of the Chinese. The whole poop blew up. Some of the crew were cut to pieces and others, still living, were thrown into the flames which burst from the vessel. Others were drowned and very few indeed were saved.

Next a small flyboat named the Koertehoef ran aground, but the greatest part of the crew were so fortunate as to escape by swimming. Only the Master and a few of his men, who had jumped into a boat, were drowned by its capsizing.

However the Commandant of our squadron having armed some sloops and supplied them with a quantity of fireworks, they were sent against the Chinese junks to try to burn them. But the number of the junks was so great and they were so well handled that they surrounded the sloops, took one of them and also two boats and made their crews prisoners. Further the Chinese, holding in their hands great pieces of sailcloth, in which they caught the grenades, immediately threw them back into our ships where they fell wounding our people, who were forced to retire with the loss of three hundred and eighty men, not counting the wounded. The enemy cut off the noses, the ears and the privy parts of the dead who remained in their hands and threw them into the sea with shouts of derision.

After so many disgraces it is not surprising that the besieged lost courage. Heaven, the Elements, the Air, the Winds, the Currents, the Earth, all declared against them, all favoured their enemies. Up to this time the besieged had been able to communicate freely with the ships. The enemy now tried to prevent this. To frustrate their design the Governor caused a small wooden redoubt to be erected, which by its fire caused great annoyance to those of them who wished to establish themselves between the Fort and the ships. Besides this the besieged turned one of their vessels into a fireship without anything appearing outside to show what they had done. The Chinese advancing to fight and take it, the Dutch abandoned it and fled in a pretended panic. When the enemy had carried it off it blew up in the middle of their junks and destroyed a great number of their people. On the other hand their canon pierced through and broke down the redoubt in several places.

The besieged might still have maintained themselves and forced the Chinese to raise the siege, if a treacherous sergeant, named Hens Jurgén, [Radis] with some others whom he had debauched, had not deserted and reported to the enemy the condition of the place. Three Dutch ships which had gone to the Pescadores to try to get cattle and fish for the sick, were cut off by the enemy and the greater part of their crews killed. Ten of them, whom they caught in the water or on the shore, had their noses and ears and right hands cut off and fastened round their necks, in which condition they were sent back as a final insult to our Nation.

Whilst these things were happening, the yacht Gravelande went to Quelang and took up the Factor Nicolas Loénus, Marc Masius Pastor and three married Dutch ladies, fifteen inhabitants of that place, sixteen children, twenty eight slaves, &c., in all 170 persons, as the place was defenceless and exposed to the insults of the Chinese. All these people were carried to Japan and landed in the little island of Disna [Deshima].

The Dutch ladies were regarded by the Japanese with extreme curiosity for they had never seen any before, and they treated them very civilly. In the end they were brought to Batavia, whence the widow of the Sieur N. Loénus, who had married again, had returned to Holland.

Admiral Cœuw, with five of his ships, went to China, to obtain help from the Tartars. But a fresh tempest having again dispersed his little squadron, he, with three of his vessels, was thrown on the coast of Siam, whence he sent them back to Batavia. The two others returned to Taiovan without having been able to get any help.

The Chinese having continuously battered the redoubt and fired more than seventeen hundred shots at it, the besieged were forced to abandon it. The enemy, taking possession of it, one hundred of them were blown into the air in consequence of a lighted match which had been left close to the powder. But the Chinese immediately raised a cavalier in the same place, put some thirty-six pounder guns in it, and having made a breach prepared to give an assault.

The Fort was by no means in condition to stand an assault successfully. Dropsy, dysentery and scurvy were rife and had carried off a large number of people. The churches were full of sick as also the warehouses; since the beginning of the siege we had lost more than sixteen hundred men, and in fact the only choice was to perish or capitulate. Thomas van Yperen and David Harthouwer went to the enemy's camp, who sent two hostages into the place, and an agreement was come to on the following conditions, viz., That all prisoners should be returned on both sides. That Fort Zeelandia should be surrendered to the Chinese with all the goods and silver in it, which amounted to some tons of gold [?] and also the cannon of which there were forty pieces. That the besieged, to the number of about nine hundred men, well and sick, should march out with arms in their hands and colours flying.

On these conditions the Fort was surrendered after a general discharge of the cannon, which the Chinese insisted upon to assure themselves that they had not been tampered with. The Dutch then embarked and were transported to Batavia.

The arms used by the Chinese are great swords with long handles which they can use either as spears or scythes. They have bows, arrows and long javelins with white streamers. They carry large ensigns, both pendants and standards, on which are painted monsters, heads of devils and the figures of dragons.

They have armour covering them from the head to the knee and a helmet on the head reaching down to the shoulders, with no openings in it except for the mouth and the eyes. On the top of the helmet is a sharp spike which they use very skilfully for wounding their enemy and throwing him down. Their armour is composed of an infinity of plates like scales, and they wear two or three of them, one over the other, which hang down and flap against their thighs and will resist musquet shots. Thus clad they look more like devils than human beings, and indeed many people think them no better than devils. They keep good order in war and in all military operations, and a thousand musquet shots will not make them give ground. At the head of each company there is generally an officer on horseback, two others on the flanks and one in the rear, well armed and carrying their swords drawn with which they cut down any one whom they see giving way."

VIII.

DEATH OF JOHN PETTIT, 1684.

The coasts of Cutch (Kachh) and Gujarât, or, speaking roughly, the north-western coast of India from Karâchl to Surat, were inhabited from time immemorial by pirates, each new wave of settlers, including recruits from the local Râjpûts, taking up the local tradition, and continuing their operations until finally suppressed by the British in the beginning of the nineteenth century. Various names were applied to different sections of these pirates, but, in general, they were referred to by Europeans as Sanganians or Sangadians.

On my reference to Sir Richard Temple as to the origin of this term he writes:—

"The Sanganian pirates of the coasts of Sindh, Kachh and Kâthiâwâr, especially of Kachh, were so famous among Europeans in the 17th century that Orilby's Atlas (1670) refers to Kachh as Sanga.

" From your quotations regarding them, they were known as Sanganians, Sangadians, Singaneys, Singanias, representing vernacular forms, such as Sangani, Sangadi, Singani, Singania. All these forms are descriptive adjectives and clearly relate to the name of a tribe inhabiting places in Sindh, Kachh and Kāthiāwār. Other European spellings of the name are Sanghanians and Sangaries.

" Sanghār, Sangār, Singhar (Changār in the Panjāb) is the name of a tribe widely spread in places over Upper India from Sindh to Bengal. There are also Sanghār or Sengar Rājputa. The tribe has been settled in India for a very long time, and was found in Sindh as Sangāmera (Tangāmera) by the Arabs in the 8th century A.D., and by Alexander's Greeks (4th century B.C.) about the Indus delta of the period as Sangada, Sangārā (Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. XIII, Pt. II (Thana), pp. 713-14, footnote).

" They came into Kachh from Sindh with the Samās, splitting into four divisions of Rājputa, and were joined by other Rājputa (Chāvara, Chāhurān). Some became Muhammadans, or perhaps emigrated as such (Indian Antiquary, Vol. V, pp. 167-174; Sherring, Hindu Tribes and Castes, Vol. II, p. 246).

" It may be assumed therefore that the Sanganians were originally very early emigrants into India through Sindh, settling down eventually as Rājputa in numerous places, and in some instances as 'low castes', like many other tribes. Those on the coasts took to piracy, doubtless a long time ago, and attracted recruits from adventurous men of Rājput origin. Their stronghold originally was at Kachhigad, five miles above Dwārka, and subsequently at Bet (Shankhodār) in Kachh: the Beyt of the Maps and of the Imperial Gazetteer, and the Bate of the older spelling, formerly known to Europeans as Sanganiat, Singania, from its association with the Sanganians (Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. V, (Cutch), pp. 95, 96)."

Of these people Alexander Hamilton (A New Account of the East Indies, I, 132-33) says:—" Their seaport is called Baet, very commodious and secure. They admit of no trade but practise piracy. They give protection to all criminals who deserve punishment from the hand of justice . . . They, being confident of their numbers, strive to board all ships they can come at by sailing. Before they engage in fight they drink Bang, which is made of a seed like hempseed that has an intoxicating quality and whilst it affects the head they are furious. They wear long hair and when they let that hang loose they'll give no quarter."<sup>15</sup>

Such were the pirates into whose hands fell Mr. John Pettit, a Member of the Bombay Council, who, having quarrelled with Sir John Child, the President, bought a ship, the George, in which he went trading to the Persian Gulf. It will be seen that, in spite of the defence, which caused the pirates serious losses, these Sanganians preferred ransom to revenge, and then, having landed their prisoners, were so callous to their sufferings and careless of their own interests that they allowed the ransom to slip out of their hands, whilst they haggled about its amount, for the want of a little attention.

The use of bang (Cannabis indica) to infuriate soldiers before attack was a common practice in the East and is referred to by Orme and other writers in their accounts of fighting in all parts of India.

I Ben Oxborough being put on board the shipp called the George, which belonged to Mr. John Pettit, himself being on board also, wee sett saile from the Island Bombay upon the 20th day of October [1684] designed for Suratt. Upon the 28th day wee were sett upon by two Sanganyan pyratte, the one a shipp, the other a very large grabb,<sup>26</sup> which wee engaged for about foure houres, but at length, wee having destroyed many of them, they left our shipp, wee sustaining noe damage but the loss of one Englishman.<sup>27</sup> But it pleased God that a very sad accident happened, for our powder took fyre and the Quarter-Deck was blown up, which falling downe, part of it broake Mr. Pettit's head and bruised his right shoulder very much and had undoubtedly prest him to death, but that the timber was supported by a great gunn, by which Mr. Pettit stood, as also he was most lamentably burnt with the powder on the left side of his face and neck and left legg and foot, which was a great torment to him, but with much adoo hee gott out with seaven more Englishmen, myself being one. Butt the shipp falling on fyre and having noe hopes to quench itt, wee betook ourselves to our boates. But the Mate, one Mr. Samuel Harris, gott into the Pinnis with three more Englishmen and most unworthily rann away with her and left us, by reason of which wee were forst to gett into the long boate, which had neither saile nor oares, by reason of which wee became a prey to the Enemye, who, seeing our distress, turned head upon us and took us prisoners; and as soone as wee came aboard of them they stript Mr. Pettit of his uper garment onely, which was a great favour, none else experiencing the same, after which hee was put asterne of their grabb in our boate, where wee continued about three houres, at the end of which time they took Mr. Pettit and myself aboard, leaving the other two in the boate, towing astearne all night with nothing for their covering but their shirts and those almost burnt off their backes, by means of which, it being very cold in the night and their burnes almost intollerable, the one dyed the next day, the other two dayes after.

For Mr. Pettit's entertainment, it was as followeth: As soone as wee entered wee were put downe into their cookroome where wee were forst to sett almost one upon another, there being seaven lascarres with us, and could take noe rest. In the morning wee understood the pyratte held a consultation what to do with us, and at length itt was determined that Mr. Pettit, myself and two Christian lascarres should bee put into the pro [? prow or native boat so called] and there to have our throats cutt and so heaved overboard. Accordingly wee were put there. Over the head the sea which came washing us [sic], which was much troublesome to Mr. Pettit's legg. Here wee continued about three houres, but Mr. Pettit, being very uneasy, sent for one of the officers and desired a better place and hee would reward him with five rupees, which as soone as they found there was money coming they granted, which I believe was one cause of our preservation, for after that wee understood they examined the Moore lascarres very strictly what itt was, and by two Banyans who was with us they understood the certainty of what hee [Mr. Pettit] was; so from thence wee were removed into their Kernoe [? canoe or boat] upon daek among their sailes, where wee had not continued but a very short time when the soulders upon deck began to bee outrageous and were about to cut us in pieces, but the officers stopt them, upon which Mr. Pettit proffered five rupees more for another place to lye in, which they granted likewise and removed us to the Quarter-Deck, where wee had a Topgallant saile allowed us for a bed and covering; but the next morning the Pylate of the shipp would not suffer us to continue there any longer, upon which Mr. Pettit promised him fifty rupees more for a good lodging where hee might be settled, which they granted also, but did not perform to expectacon, for wee were put down into their hold upon the rock stones which was all their Ballis [ballast] and there wee were forst to lye all the terme of the voyage, itt being tenn dayes (which was very hard), in all which time Mr. Pettit never went to stool, which did much disorder him and putt him into a feaver and could gett neither Doctor nor Cururgion to give him help but a poor silly Barber, who brought a little white oyntment, which I cannot tell whether itt did him good or hurt.

At length wee were carryed ashore, Mr. Pettit being soe unwildy hee was forst to be carryed out in the Topgallant saile by forse of men, and when on shore was carryed up to their towne in a cart. The place being called Ramra, <sup>28</sup> as soone as wee came to their towne wee were called before their Roger [Rājā] or King and examined where hee was, very sivilly treated, and they bid him [Mr. Pettit] feare nothing, for hee should sustaine noe damage but should have what hee desired. But all hee could gett was a little rise and butter, save a great deel of Cow-milk and butter-milk, and the which I believe did him harme, but hee could not be dissuaded from itt; alsoe hee was brought to see low a condicon by reason of his burnes as hee could not turne his legg up on his body but as I turned itt for him, neither could hee make water or goe to stoole but as I turned him and held a peece of potsherds to him to ease himselfe, yet notwithstanding, hee had noe feare nor apprehencon of any danger but seemed to bee very chearly, I endeavoring to promote itt what I could.

At length the Roger sent to him about his ransume and demaunded a lack of rupees, but at last fell to ten thousand which hee granted, but the next day they went back of their words and would have five thousand more, which too much troubled him, hee telling me hee would willingly give itt but was afraid if hee should condescend they would stand off againe, and soe hee should never know when hee had done.

The night after, wee having been ashoare seaven dayes, I heard him talke idly [deliriously]. In the morning hee was pretty well but I was afraid of him, askt him if hee had any words to send to Suratt. Hee answered Noe. Then I askt him if hee had made his will. Hee told mee Is [Yes], soe I would trouble him noe more at that time, hee being inclinable to sleepe, but at last I, seeing him grow worse and worse, sent to the Roger to acquaint helpe I thought hee could not continue [to live] and soe they would lose their ransume, upon which came a great many of the Cheife men and felt of his pulse, some saying hee was not so ill, others shaking their heads at him.

But noe helpe, and in the afternoone, I lyeing by him, hee fell into a very cold sweat and in an houres time departed, which as soone as itt was knowne there was order given for a grave to bee made and myselfe and three of the blacks were commanded to carry him to his grave, which we did. Myselfe was one of the two which put him in. This as near as I can remember is the whole of this sad Axydent concerning Mr. Pettit, which I affirme to be the truth. Witnesse my hand.<sup>29</sup>

BEN OXBOROUGH. [India Office Records, O.C. No. 5304.]

The account given by the Mate, Samuel Harris, is as follows:—

October the 29th, 1684. At eleven in the forenoon engaged with the Singaneys, where they boarded us with four or five hundred men, continuing till three in the afternoon, then they finding us to be too hot for them, put off and fell astern, then we firing off muskets out of the Great Cabin windows, the powder room scuttle being open, blew our ship up and killed our commander Thomas Matthews and [the] gunner, four Englishmen more, five lascars and two Portuguese women outright. Then the fire being so fierce we was forced to take to our boats. Mr. John Pettit, Mr. Oxenbon [or Oxborough], six lascars, one Banyan in the longboat, Samuel Harris and the Boatswaine, two Englishmen more, one Portuguese merchant, fifteen wounded lascars, took to the Pinnace, leaving some twenty or twenty-five souls on board the ship alive. The longboat having no oars in her was taken up by the Singaneys, but we got ashore the next morning at Tarrapore [Tārāpur, Cambay] where one Englishman dyed of his wounds and five lascars.

<sup>29</sup> According to this account, Hamilton's statement (I, 198, 202) that Pettit died after six months captivity, owing to Sir John Child's refusal to allow him to be ransomed, is quite inaccurate.

Damages received by him [i.e., from the enemy], lost our head [fore-part, bows] and bowspritt, one man killed. His damage was unknown, but upon our deck we had forty or fifty of his men dead and as many more swam by the board crying for help. This from me

SECOND NOTE ON THE HATHIGUMPHA INSCRIPTION OF KHARAVELA.

By R. C. MAJUMDAR, M.A., Ph.D. ; CALCUTTA.

IN my previous note<sup>1</sup> on the edition of the above inscription by Messrs. K. P. Jayaswal and R. D. Banerji, I discussed mainly the passage alleged to have contained the date of the inscription. Since then a new impression of the inscription has been taken by Mr. K. P. Jayaswal, and his revised readings and notes have been published in JBORS., December 1918.<sup>2</sup> It is gratifying to note that the learned scholar has now given up the reading pānatariyā-saphivasasate which was looked upon as the key-stone of the date of the inscription, but which, as I contended in my note, was altogether untenable. Unfortunately, however, the new reading proposed is equally, or rather still more, unsatisfactory. It runs as follows:—“pānatariya-sata-sahasahi Muriya kālam”. As no facsimile is given along with the revised reading, we can only take help of that which was first published. Now, unless this is looked upon as an absolute forgery, we fail to understand how the new reading can be evolved at all. Any one who looks at the estampage can easily satisfy himself that the letters can by no means be construed as satasahasahi. The editor remarks:—“I examined the passage for several successive days, and so did Mr. Panday along with me. We both came to the definite conclusion that the text is as given above. . . . We had three fresh impressions taken and they all confirmed the above readings. . . . I can with absolute confidence say that the former readings were wrong.”<sup>3</sup> It is indeed unfortunate that the editor did not see his way to publish this new impression, but until that is done, it is legitimate to hold that the new reading proposed by him is sufficiently doubtful. The reader is indeed puzzled, when he finds that the same letters are read, with equally absolute confidence, once as saphivasasate rāja and at another time as sata sahasahi.

While first editing the inscription, Mr. Jayaswal rejected the theory that the expression beginning with choyāṭha aga satika, in line 16, denoted any date, even when taken along with the preceding words which were interpreted as year 165 of the time of king Muriya.<sup>4</sup> He now takes the very expression as the principal phrase recording the date by itself, and translates the whole sentence as follows :—"He (the king) completes the Muriya time (era), counted, and being of an interval of sixtyfour with a century."<sup>5</sup> It is a very unusual way of expressing dates, to say the least of it, even if we hold that the expression is rightly read and the translation correctly made. There are, however, grounds of doubt in both these respects. With the facsimile before us it is difficult to read kāla in place of kāle and vochhiñneṣ instead of vochhiñne, while the proposed interpretation of vochhiñneṣ and upādāyati is certainly not such as carries immediate conviction. We need not pursue the subject further till the new impressions of this very important portion of the record are made accessible to the public. In the meantime we are bound to maintain that no case has as yet been made for those who look upon line 16 of this inscription as containing any reference to a date.<sup>6</sup>

Much has been made of the expression tatiye kaliṅga-rājavase purisa-yuge<sup>7</sup> in ll. 2-3. Mr. Jayaswal has taken this to refer to the "third dynasty of Kaliṅga" and proceeded to discuss the two dynasties that preceded the one to which Khāravela belonged. In his opinion the first dynasty occupied the throne of Kaliṅga from the time of Mahābhārata war to its conquest by Nandivardhana, and the second, during the interval between the fall of the Nandas and the conquest of the country by the emperor Aśoka; the Cheta dynasty to which Khāravela belonged and which reasserted the independence of Kaliṅga being of course the third. According to Mr. Jayaswal "the inscription thus indirectly confirms the Purāṇas, which indicate that the Aryan rule in Kaliṅga had come down for some 1300 years."<sup>8</sup>

I am not prepared to concede that the expression certainly means "third dynasty of Kaliṅga." The simple meaning seems to be "the third generation (yuga)<sup>9</sup> of the Kaliṅga kings in the male line." This seems very suitable when taken along with the context. For Khāravela who would thus belong to the third generation of Kaliṅga kings, was a young contemporary of king Śātakarṇi, who has been generally identified with the first Andhra king of the name and who was the third king of that royal family. It may be assumed that when the disruption of the Maurya empire began, both the Kaliṅgas and the Andhras seized the opportunity and declared their independence, and the one event followed closely upon the other. Although Śātakarṇi did not probably belong to the third generation, his long reign must be presumed to have covered the period for the third generation.

But, even assuming that the expression really means "the third dynasty of Kaliṅga," there is no reason to connect the first dynasty with that described in Mahābhārata. The Nandas and the Mauryas had conquered Kaliṅga and they might be looked upon respectively as the first and second dynasties. The objection that they were conquerors from the north does not carry any weight in view of the presumption made by Mr. Jayaswal that the Cheta dynasty too came from the north. It may be pointed out in this connection that it is

extremely unusual for a king to refer to, far less to number, the dynasties that preceded his own and I do not believe there is another instance in Indian Epigraphy. The interpretation assigned by Mr. Jayaswal to the expression is therefore less probable even on general grounds, whereas it is extremely unsafe to look upon it even as an indirect confirmation of the Pauranic statement that the Aryan rule in Kāliṅga had come down for some 1300 years.

From some expression in line 4, Mr. Jayaswal has come to the conclusion that, according to the official estimate, the population of Kāliṅga numbered thirty-five hundred thousand.<sup>10</sup> He has read the expression as panaṭṣāhi sata-sahasēhi pakatiyo cha raṇjayati.<sup>11</sup> Now any one who looks at the estampage can satisfy himself that the third letter cannot be ti and that the fifth and the sixth letters cannot be respectively ha and sa. Besides, the second letter has a distinct ṣ mark on the left and most likely represents no. If the published facsimile is a faithful one, I have not the slightest doubt that the reading adopted by Mr. Jayaswal cannot be maintained.

Mr. Jayaswal has traced the name of the contemporary king of Magadha in line 12. He first read the expression as "Ma(ga)dhdā cha Rājāna(ṣ)Bahapati-mitraṣ pāde vaṇḍāpayati" and sought to identify king Bahapatimitra with the well-known king Bṛihaspati-mitra whose name appears in coins and inscriptions as Bahasati-mita.<sup>12</sup> In his revised reading he has given the name as Bahasatimita, thus removing the discrepancy between the two forms. He remarks:—"The rock decided that the name is spelt as Bahasati not Bahapati" and further informs us that a cast was taken of the letters on Plaster of Paris.<sup>13</sup> It is difficult to understand, why, in this case as well as in the all-important expression containing the date, the editor did not think it necessary to give the benefit of his personal examination of the rock to the public in the shape of improved facsimiles. He ought to have considered that expressions containing such important historical information must be placed above all doubts and cannot be accepted merely on the authority of any scholar, however great. I do not mean any disrespect to Mr. Jayaswal or cast any doubt upon his scholarship, but I am bound, in all fairness, to confess, that the facsimile which was published with his original article does not seem to me to lend any weight to his view. After a close and careful inspection of the letters I am of opinion that the reading adopted by Mr. Jayaswal is mostly conjectural. The first two letters are hopelessly indistinct, and the portion that remains of the third letter does not make it likely that it represents dha. As regards the six letters which have been read as Bahasatimitraṣ, the second letter seems to have a clear v sign attached to it, and the third and fourth letters look like pa and sa. I would propose the tentative reading bahu pasṣaitaṣ which gives good sense. I do not of course deny that the reading Bahasatimitaṣ might, after all, be proved to be correct but so long as it is not supported by a clear impression of the inscription, all conjectures about the relation of king Khāravēla and Bahasatimitra must be altogether given up.

The arguments by which Mr. Jayaswal has sought to identify Bṛihaspatimitra and Pushyamitra<sup>14</sup> seem to me more ingenious than convincing. But after what has been said above the topic need not be discussed in this connection.

An expression in line 11 has led Mr. Jayaswal to conclude that Khāravēla led out in procession the wooden statue of Ketubhadra, the Kāliṅga hero, who died in the great war, described in Mahābhārata, thirteen hundred years ago. He further observes in this connection that "a careful chronicle had been kept in Orissa. . . . Their record could go back 1300 years."<sup>15</sup> He reads the expression as "nekāsayati janapadabhāvanāḥ cha terasa-vasa-sata-Ketubhadra-titāmara-deha-saghātāḥ." But the letter which has been read as va in terasa-vasa-sata has a distinct hook on its upper left, and although the lower loop is a little larger than usual, it should more properly be read as kha. I therefore propose the reading "nekāsayati janapadabhāvanāḥ cha terasa-Khasa-sataḥ katabhadra ( . . . ) deha-saghātāḥ". It may be translated as follows:—"Expels the thirteen hundred Khasas<sup>16</sup> who were a cause of anxiety to the whole community and who injured the body of the ascetics . . ." But even if Mr. Jayaswal's reading be accepted, his conclusions about Ketubhadra and the chronicle of Orissa reaching back thirteen hundred years seem to rest on too slender a hypothesis to be taken seriously. Regarding the expression terasa-vasa-sata Mr. Jayaswal remarks:—"It may be said that terasa-vasasata may mean 113 years also. But we have another such expression in the inscription ti-vasa-sata which, as has been shown, can only mean 300 and not 103 years. . . That being so we must take the similar expression terasa-vasa-sata in the same way, i.e., to mean 1300 and not 113."<sup>17</sup> Mr. Jayaswal evidently forgets that a few pages later he explained another similar expression viz. sa/hi-vasa-sata as 160 and not 6,000.

Then, as regards Ketubhadra or "His Highness Ketu" Mr. Jayaswal remarks that "the age given for him in the inscription—thirteen centuries before Khāravela's time (1300 : 100—1400 B.C.)—takes us to men who lived about the date of Mahābhārata war as given by the Purāṇas (1424 B.C.)". This naturally led him to look into Mahābhārata and there he found, to his agreeable surprise, that "Ketumān commanded the army of Kalinga in the great war as Commander-in-chief of the Kalinga forces. He was the eldest son of the king of Kalinga. He fought a great battle against Bhīma and had a heroic end on the battlefield."<sup>18</sup>

This is a serious error on the part of Mr. Jayaswal. The chapter 54 of Bhishmaparvan, to which he gives reference, clearly shows that the king of Kalinga named Śrutāyu actually commanded his forces in the battlefield and was killed by Bhīma, that his son "who fought a great battle against Bhīma and had a heroic end" was named Sakradeva, and that Ketumān was the name of a Nishāda chief who fought on the side of Duryodhana along with the Kalinga chief and met his end on the same day. The following verses, among others, from chapter 54 of Bhishmaparvan leave no doubt on the above points:—

"Tataḥ Śrutāyuh saṁkruddho rājā Ketumatā saha |

Asasāda raṇe Bhīmaḥ vyūḥhānikeshu (Chedishu) || (6)

Kalingas=tu maheshvāsaḥ putras=ch=āsyā mahārathah || (18)

Sakradeva iti khyāto jaghnatuh Pāṇḍavam śaraiḥ" || (19)

(Cf. also verses 24, 72, 75, 77).

Thus Ketumān was not only not a king or even a prince of Kalinga but was a Nishāda by caste (vs. 5 and 7) and his forces are clearly distinguished from the Kalinga army. It is a matter of surprise how, inspite of all these detailed descriptions, Mr. Jayaswal could have made Ketumān a Kalinga hero and the son of a Kalinga king !!

After all I do not find that much real progress has been made in the elucidation of the record beyond what was done by former scholars with the help of Pandit Bhagawanlal's eye-copy, although two reputed scholars, with adequate equipments, have since visited the cave in order to make a scientific study of the inscription. Reliable historical information which they have been able to glean out of the record does not make any substantial addition to what we already knew about it, and this is a great disappointment to those who, like myself, built high hopes on a scientific study of the inscription. The result is no doubt to be sincerely deplored, but one cannot help thinking that it is mainly due to the decaying state of the cave which no longer admits of a sure interpretation of the record, but gives wide scope to guesses and conjectures. It is difficult to give any other explanation of the serious differences which pervade the two separate editions of the text, although both are based upon facsimiles prepared by approved scientific process, and aided by the personal experience of two distinguished scholars. The difficulty is, that we are asked to take on trust many things which do not appear clearly upon the estampage; but, in view of the differences between the two editions we may be excused if we refuse to concede this demand. Whether this state of things will ever be improved admits of doubt, but, in the meanwhile, we should rather confess that we know little than accept conclusions which do not clearly follow from the impression which we actually possess.

In the July-October number of JRAS., 1918, Dr. V. A. Smith contributed a short note on the Hāthigumpha inscription of Khāravela, in order, as he says, to give wide publicity to the learned paper on the above subject written by Mr. K. P. Jayaswal in JBORS., Vol. III, p. 425. Dr. V. A. Smith practically endorsed all the views put forward by Mr. K. P. Jayaswal and did not even hesitate to give out as his opinion that the results achieved by Mr. Jayaswal were almost final.<sup>19</sup> A great deal of importance naturally attaches to what Dr. V. A. Smith says on a matter relating to the history of ancient India and this makes it incumbent upon those who hold different views about Mr. Jayaswal's conclusions to test and analyse them a little more closely than would otherwise have been necessary. The second edition of the inscription with radical changes in the reading and the interpretation of the record is the most emphatic retort to Dr. V. A. Smith's views about the finality of the results achieved by Mr. Jayaswal. The above discussion is intended to demonstrate that the second edition of the inscription has as much or as little claim to be regarded as final as the first.

THE INTERVOCALIC CONSONANTS IN TAMIL.

By JULES BLOCH.<sup>1</sup>

So long ago as 1872, at p. 309ff. of Vol. I. of the Indian Antiquary, Burnell called the attention of scholars to a passage in Kumārila Bhaṭṭa's Tantravārttika, a work composed towards the end of the VIIth century A.D., a passage notable inasmuch as it quotes sundry Dravidian words. In Vol. XLII of the Indian Antiquary (pp. 200, 201) Mr. P. T. Srinivas Iyengar has given a new and corrected reading of this interesting passage, of which it may be convenient to repeat the meaning here:—

"So in Dravidian etc. language, in the case of words ending in consonants, we find that by inserted alterations, such as the addition of vowel terminations or feminine suffixes, we obtain words which bear a meaning in our own speech. For example, from cor, 'boiled rice', we get cora, 'thief'. From atar, 'road', we make atara, by saying: "True, as it is difficult to traverse [dustara], the road is atara or 'impassable'." So, again, the word pāp, ending in the consonant p, signifies 'a serpent'; but by adding the vowel a, we can assert: "True, it is indeed 'maleficent' or pāpa." Similarly the word māl, which means 'woman' can be made into mālā, 'a garland'. "And that is true," we remark. So also the word vair, when it ends with r, signifies 'the belly'. But pronounce it as vairi and reason as follows: "Yes, in impelling all famished mortals to crime, the belly in fact acts as an enemy, a vairi." But though in the case of the Dravidian etc. language, we can accommodate the words at will [to make sense], yet when it is a question of the Persian, barbarian, Greek, Roman and other such languages, we know not how to arrange them so as to arrive at any meaning whatever."

From what speech, then, are taken the words cited by Kumārila? The opinion generally held is that we have here to do with Tamil, or rather chiefly with Tamil, as is sufficiently indicated by the use of the group-word Drāviḍādi before the singular bhāḍyam. The implicitly accepted ground for that opinion, which may be taken to be as valid now as ever it was, is that all the words cited by Kumārila are known to us in Tamil. If we must admit that the word māl in the sense of 'woman' does not occur anywhere, it can nevertheless be interpreted, as Mr. Srinivas Iyengar has explained in his article, as being clumsily extracted from an authentic compound Tamil phrase. Strongest argument of all, two of these words atar and cor, are at present unknown anywhere except in Tamil. Finally, we have Caldwell's identification of the nouns Drāviḍa and Tamil, at pp. 8 to 10 of his Comparative Grammar of Dravidian Languages (3rd ed.), a matter to which I shall presently revert. Subject to the result of possible further investigation of the use of the words in question, and especially atar and cor, in other Dravidian speeches, we can, I think, already deduce some significant indications as to the probable development of the Tamil language from this passage of Kumārila.

In the first place, Mr. Srinivas Iyengar (herein following Burnell) notes that three of the examples quoted by the Sanskrit writer are defective, inasmuch as the words śōru, pāmbu and vayiru have not the consonantal termination postulated by Kumārila. But, with all due deference to Sir G. A. Grierson and Dr. Sten Konow (Vol. IV, Munḍa-Dravidian, p. 287 of the Linguistic Survey; cf. also Burnell's South Indian Palaeography, p. 126, n. 2), who think the assumption a rash one, I venture to think that there is no reason to suppose that the existing vowel-endings are not quite modern. Indeed, the terminal vowel is often absent in colloquial Tamil at the present day, and normally disappears in compound words and in oblique cases of the noun. It should also be noted that, in passing from one Dravidian language to another, we find instances of this change. Take, for instance, the affix of the plural, which in Tamil is -gaḷ (colloquial -ga), in Canarese -gaḷu (colloquial -gaḷ), in Tulu -kuḷu and in Telugu -lu. Take, again, the classical Tamil il, 'house', expanded into -ile as the ending of the locative case, which becomes in Telugu illu, and in Kui iḍu. So the Tamil taṇṇir (colloquial taṇṇi) 'water', becomes in Telugu niḷḷu.

But the most interesting inferences to be deduced from the form of the words quoted by Kumārila relate to the law, characteristic of Tamil, by which the intervocalic occlusive consonants become sonants. This law is well known (see, for example, Caldwell, p. 138ff.) and may be stated thus. As initials, the occlusive k, t and p remain surds, as also when they are doubled between vowels. But they become sonants (and often even spirants) when they occur singly between vowels, and are also sonants after nasals. Similarly, as an initial s is often pronounced as c, and always when it is doubled; after ñ it always becomes j. (Note here the significant difference between Tamil vayiru and Canarese basir, 'belly'; cf. Caldwell, p. 153, and Vinson, Manuel de la langue Tamoule, pp. 44, 45). The same rule applies to t and r (both included in the category of 'strong' letters as distinguished from 'middle' letters, i.e. liquids, and 'soft' letters, i.e. nasals), save only that they do not occur as initials; hence, between vowels, we may get either tt and tt or d and r. It is a consequence of this law that such Sanskrit words as kathā, danta, pāpam, are transliterated in Tamil as kadei (there are no aspirated consonants in Tamil), tandam, pābam, and even pāvam.

This rule, which is clearly illustrated in Tamil by the system of script, in which the surd and the sonant are undistinguishable from one another, may possibly have operated also in other dialects of the same family. No doubt it is a result of it that in Canarese, no less than in Tamil, we get in compound numerals the form padu- as compared with pattu, 'ten'. But I need not elaborate a chapter in phonetic history whose existence we all suspect, but of which none of us has yet any direct proof.

Be that as it may, the forms pāp and, above all, atar, prove (as Grierson and Steu Konow have already pointed out, op. cit., p. 288) that this law of the voicing of intermediate surds has operated in Tamil subsequently to the time when Kumārila Bhaṭṭa wrote. In fact, the word atar survives in Tamil (and in Tamil only, as aforesaid) in the compound form adar-kkōl, 'highway robbery.' That the d in this word was once pronounced as a surd by Kumārila's contemporaries is proved unmistakably by the fact that he identifies the word with the Sanskrit root tar. As for his word pāp, it is evidently the common stem from which we get Tamil pāmbu, Canarese pāvu, and Telugu pāmu, to which we must add the adjectival form quoted by Caldwell (p. 202), which gives pāppu-kkōdi, 'serpent banner'. Note the same consonantal changes in the various Dravidian names for the Melia tree, which are in Tamil vēmbu, in Canarese bēvu, and in Telugu vēma; compare again, Tamil kāmbu with Canarese kāvu, meaning 'stalk', 'handle'. We may, then, legitimately infer that nasalisation after a long vowel in all these Tamil words is recent, and that the word for 'serpent', in particular, originally ended in a surd p.

It is evident, then, that intervocalic surds existed in old Tamil. We may even legitimately ask whether there was not a time when that language contained only surd consonants to the exclusion of sonants. This assumption alone would explain why, when they adopted the northern alphabet, the Tamils came to exclude the symbols representing sonants, just as, owing to the absence of aspirates in their own language, they rejected the symbols of aspirated consonants. So both from the testimony of Kumārila Bhaṭṭa and from the orthographical facts of the language we are led to infer that the present sonority of intervocalic consonants is a secondary and modern development.

But an even more interesting conclusion is now open to us. If we examine the phonetic state of the Indo-Aryan languages towards the beginning of the Christian era, we shall find that in these languages the occlusives occur in the following fashion (see J. Bloch, Formation de la langue marathe, §§ 14, 81):—

Final occlusives have disappeared.

Initial occlusives survive, whether surds or sonants.

Between vowels, we find, firstly, that doubled letters (surd and sonants) have taken the place of the old compound consonants; and, secondly, that single intervocalic consonants are now sonants exclusively, whether they were originally surd or sonant.

If we omit the consideration of aspirated consonants (and these are lacking to all languages of Southern India, including the Indo-Aryan Singhalese), we cannot but be struck by the remarkable similarity of the phonetic changes undergone by the two families of languages. But we can carry the parallel even further. In the subsequent middle-Indian Aryan speeches, intervocalic sonants, we shall find, become spirant or disappear; on the other hand, the doubled consonants which took the place of the classical compound consonants are simplified in the modern Indo-Aryan languages. Exactly in the same way, the intervocalic sonants of modern Tamil tend to become spirants, and double letters as in Northern India, to become single. Nay, the very change of surds into sonants after nasals has a singular parallel, and that at a distant date in the Indo-Aryan dialects of the North West (see Journal Asiatique, 1913, I, p. 331ff).

But if we have established, in medieval and modern times, a singularly close parallel development in the two groups of languages, may we not conjecture a similar parallelism in a more distant past? Suppose, as we easily may, that the Sanskritic languages of Hindustan had only become known to us at that stage of development at which we first make acquaintance with the earliest dated documents of Dravidian speech, and that we were still unaware of their affinities with Indo-European languages. It would obviously be impossible to adduce documentary proof of the earliest stage of these tongues, when they possessed not only intervocalic surds, but compound consonants. For example, there would be nothing to justify us in assuming the existence of a primitive tr-, either, say, as an initial in the name of the number 'three', which would only be known to us in Prakrit as tiṇṇi, in Hindi and in Marathi as tīn, in Singhalese as tun, etc., nor, again, could we prove its existence in the midst of the word signifying 'leaf', since it would only be known to us as surviving in Prakrit patta-, in Marāṭhi and Bengali pāt, in Singhalese pat, etc. Nor would it be possible for us to recognize the primitive existence of an initial dr- in a word only known to us through its descendants, the Pali doni-, Marāṭhi dop, Bengali duni, and Singhalese dena, all signifying 'trough' or 'boat'. Equally impossible would it be for us to surmise the existence of the same compound as a medial in the word meaning 'turmeric,' which we should only know as Prakrit haliddā, haladdā, Marāṭhi and Gujarāṭi halad, Hindi haldī, Singhalese haladu, and so forth. Now, in regard to the Dravidian speeches, we possess only these secondary survivals. But there is no reason to prevent us from assuming that these languages, like those of Northern India, once possessed compound consonants such as, in Sanskrit, have been preserved in written records as tri-, patra-, droṇi- and haridrā.

Indeed we may find in Tamil itself modern examples of assimilations similar to those which our theory of Tamil origins postulates. We have, for example, kt, t'k > kk, td > dd, etc. (see Vinson, pp. 48, 49). It is probable that in such transformations we may find the explanation of changes which are used to express grammatical changes of meaning, such as in the oblique stem of nouns, or in the past tenses of verbs (cf. Vinson, p. 111; Grierson, Ling. Survey, IV, p. 291). But above and beyond these vague indications, there survives to us one word which supplies direct proof of the existence of a parent compound consonant, and that is the word Tamil itself. If its modern form is tamiḷ, it was adopted into Sanskrit in early times as draviḍa-, which occurs, for example, in the Mahābhārata, in the Atharva-vedaparīṣiṣṭa, and in the Code of Manu. Not only has the word thus transliterated survived to us in Sanskrit literature, but it even imposed itself on Tamil men of letters, who retransliterated it into their own characters as tiramiḍa. On the other hand, it has made its way into European scripts. We find it in Peutinger's Table as Damirice, in the Periplus and in Ptolemy as Δαμυρικη, which may well be a copyist's error for * Δαμυρικη.

(see Burnell, South Indian Pal., p. 51, n. 1; Caldwell, p. 10); the cosmographer of Ravenna records the name as Dimirica. Now, as Dr. Caldwell has justly observed, the transmutation of dr- into d- is Prakritic (cf. also the Pali Dāmiḷo in the Mahāvamsa). How great is the probability that a parallel transformation has occurred in Tamil itself! In any case, it is inconceivable that, when the word Dravida made its appearance in Sanskrit, it was not a transliteration of an authentic indigenous word. Whereas it is impossible to suggest any previously existing Sanskrit model on which an indigenous word more closely resembling the surviving Tamil could have been moulded into Dravida.

If we now come to consider the chronology of the processes considered above, we may first state that the simplification of the old grouped consonants must have occurred at about the same date in Tamil as in Indo-Aryan languages; at least, if the testimony of the geographers' records authenticate local usage and not forms belonging exclusively to the Indo-Aryan dialects which borrowed Dravidian place names.

As for the surding of sonant consonants, we have seen it proved for the initial by the modern pronunciation tamiḷ, and confirmed for intervocalic consonants by the testimony of Kumārila, and, above all, generally by the absence of sonant symbols in the alphabet of a language which possesses voiced sounds now and which no doubt had them in prehistoric times also. So we may conclude that this loss of sonority must be sought for somewhere between the beginning of the Christian era and the time of Kumārila.

At what date, then, did the surds thus obtained again become sonants, as they now are, between vowels? We do not know. But we may infer that the change is comparatively recent. The Nappūḷ, written about A.D. 1200, (see Barnett, Cat. of Tamil Books in the British Museum, preface, p. III) still inculcates (III, 20) that in the transcription of Sanskrit words, the first letter of each varga represents the three following letters (for example the letter k does duty for k, kā, g and gā, not only without distinguishing sonants from surds, but also without indicating any difference of sound due to the place of the letter in a word). Besides, the existence of doubled consonants is expressly recognized (II, 55), but without the faintest allusion to any difference in articulation. Finally, the doubling of the initial letter of the second members of compound-words (IV, 15ff.), although it may seem to indicate a difference in pronunciation between the initial and the intervocalic consonant, is by no means conclusive, even on that point. Its occurrence may depend on various conditions, among them the nature of the preceding sound (compare Ko-pparakesariyaman as opposed to madirai-kōḍa in the inscription of Nandivarman the Pallava, VIIIth century; see Hultzsch, South Indian Inscriptions, II, p. 370); and it is easy to conceive a stage in the history of the language, (whatever be the future alterations), when the initial consonants may have been uttered with a special stress; this would not imply that the intervocalic consonants were necessarily weaker. So we may admit that in A.D. 1200 there is not yet any clear trace to be found of the change in question.

MISCELLANEA.

PALÆSIMUNDU.

The Periplus applies the name 'Palæsimundu' to the island which was called by the ancients 'Taprobane' (Ceylon). Pliny knows the name (VI, 24). Ptolemy too notes that the ancient name of the island was Simundu. According to Lassen the word 'Palæsimundu' is the Sanskrit Pāli-sthāna, "abode of the law of piety"; i.e., the Dharma of Gautama Buddha. (See Schoff's Periplus, p. 249.) This view though ingenious is far from satisfactory.

The Arthashastra of Kauṭilya throws some light on the matter. In Book II, Chapter XI, we have the following passages:—

“Kauṭa, that which is obtained in the Kūṭa; Mauleyaka, that which is found in the Mūleya; and Pārasamudraka, that which is found beyond the ocean, are several varieties of gems.”

“(As to) Agaru:—

Joṅgaka is black or variegated black and is possessed of variegated spots; Doṅgaka is black; and Pārasamudraka is of variegated colour and smells like casrus or like Navamālika.”

According to the commentator ‘Pārasamudraka’ means that which is available in the island of Sīnhala (Ceylon). From this it is clear that ‘Pārasamudra’ is Ceylon. Have we not in the term the Sanskrit original of ‘Palasimundu’?

BOOK-NOTICE.

THE HARSHACHARITA OF BĪṢABHAṬṬA (Uchchhāṣaṭ 1–VIII), edited with an Introduction and Notes by P. V. KANE, M.A., LL.M. Bombay, 1918.

The Harshacharita is one of the most difficult Sanskrit prose kāvyas causing much perplexity to University students; but Mr. Kane's annotations will enable even private students to understand difficult passages full of puns. Mr. Kane has taken great pains to elucidate the language with explanations, references to various Sanskrit texts and parallel passages and has not passed over really difficult passages with the remark apashyam. Rather, he has clearly marked out the hard ones. As for his hard verse I, 18, I like to take it and the next one to mean that our poet says that although his tongue, as if drawn inwards (for it is rashness on his part to write a biography of Harsha), does not set about to write a poem even when he remembers the great encouragement shown to him by the rich king (Harshavardhana who made rich presents to our poet), yet his devotion to the king makes him bold to attempt it, though he is not equal to the task.

But the Harshacharita is not simply a kāvyā requiring the knowledge of kośa, vyākaraṇa and ślokaśāstra only to explain it. It is a historical poem full of obscure historical allusions and Mr. Kane is not so very successful in his historical notes as he is in his explanatory ones. In spite of Dr. Schmidt's assent (Ind. Ant., 1906, p. 215) to Pandit Krishnamachariar's theory (stated in the Introduction of his edition of Pārvaṭi-pariṇaya Vāṇīśāstra, Skr. Series, Srirangam, 1906) that the Pārvaṭi-pariṇaya was composed, not by the author of Kādambarī but by Vāmana Bhaṭṭa-Bāṇa (of the Vāṇya-gotra), the author of Śabdaraṇāka-ravighaṇa and Vīraṇāyaka-charita (a biography of the Rājā king V em alias Vīraṇāyaka of the 15th century), Mr. Kane still clings to the old theory without even alluding to Pandit Krishnamachariar's researches. He still identifies, notwithstanding Prof. Pathak's and Dr. Vincent Smith's important contributions to the Vākātaka chronology, Devagupta of Magadha (A.D. 680–700) with the maternal grandfather of the Vākātaka king, Pravaraśena II. He has not a word to elucidate the history of Kumāra alias Bhāskara-varman of Prāgyjyotiṣa from the latter's Nidhanpur inscription (EL., XII, p. 63). He has no note to offer on the passage (p. 50). भविष्यतितावत्स्व...

सूचनमसिलतया...अनुनासनिनिवास्वस्व सुनिवस्व..., nor on (p. 51) भरिपुरे व परकलवकानुक. कामिनी. वेद्यगुप्त चन्द्रगुप्तकपतिनयान्. On Padmāvatī, the capital of the Nāgas (long ago identified by Cunningham with Narwar), he writes, “What particular city is meant we cannot say.” He quotes the Rājatarāṅgi (I, 172-3) to state that Nāgārjuna was, according to it, a king (who lived 150 years after Buddha)—a statement not fully correct for Kalhaṇa says that Bhūmīśvara (and not king) Bodhisattva Nāgārjuna dwelt in the ‘forest of Six Arhats’ and flourished during the reigns of Kanishka, Hushka and Jushka—but not those passages of it (II, 148; III, 54) which refer to Varuṇa's parasol in possession of the king of Assam and which ought to be quoted to explain the present of Varuṇa's parasol made by Bhāskara-varman to Harshavardhana as described in Uchchhāṣa VII. His geographical notes are rather vague: is it correct to state that Gāndhāra is Kandahar or that Aṅga is North Bengal?

We point out these shortcomings not in the spirit of fault-finding but in order to find the future publications of Mr. Kane to be free from similar defects.

FIGHT BETWEEN H.M.S. PHŒNIX AND A SANGANIAN PIRATE.

In the year 1685 Captain John Tyrrel of H.M.S. Phœnix of 42 guns, was cruising between Bombay and the Persian Gulf to protect trade, and ran across a Sanganian vessel of 150 tons, 120 men and 8 guns off Versova on the west of Salsette Island. The general account is that she attacked the Phœnix mistaking her for a merchantman, but in the first version of the engagement (by an eyewitness) it is stated that the Phœnix summoned her to submit to examination which she refused to do. Probably the real truth is that she accepted the fight under the illusion stated and, having accepted it, her crew fought it out with the courage which is characteristic of the Indian Rājputs, for the Sanganians were of Rājput descent and their traditions forbade them to surrender. The Lieutenant [George] Byng whose gallantry secured victory to the English was the father of Admiral John Byng who was shot in 1757 for his conduct in the Mediterranean. The Admiral and the great-grandfather of Sir Julian (now Lord) Byng, who has so greatly distinguished himself in the recent war, were brothers.

It is a curious fact that shortly after this date, when European pirates appeared in these waters, the native pirates seem to have taken a rest. One would have thought that they would have resisted any poaching on their preserves, and it is certain that if the Indian merchantmen had fought with anything like the same courage as these Sanganians, the European pirates would have left them alone.

"We set sail [from Bombay] the 11th [September 1685] in the morning with the wind at north-west a small gale and the 13th at 8 in the morning we, being off Cosseer<sup>20</sup> espied a ship in the offing at an anchor, having her main topmast and main yards down. We takt and stood toward her, haveing the wind at north-north-west, a fresh gale. At  $\frac{1}{2}$  past 9 she got under saile. We did perseve that she was a country ship by her proe.<sup>21</sup> We fired a gun and shot, but the shot did not come near her, we keeping of our Luf to get up with her, firing guns to make her bear down to us [in order that we might examine her]. At length she fired at us. Her shot grazed on our bowe near us. Then we kept firing, and at 11 her boat broak lose from her starne, haveing 2 men in her, and at 12 we was neare unto her. We past a broadside into her. They fired several times at us with their guns and small arms. Our Captain was loth to board her,<sup>22</sup> we passing several broadsides into her and vollies of small-shot, in so much that we did judge that we had done them great damedges. They killed but one of our men, which was a passenger as I was.<sup>23</sup> At  $\frac{1}{2}$  past one we boarded her but dast not enter <sup>24</sup> a man, for they was very stout and bould in theyr assaults with bowes and arrows, lances, sords and targats and abundance of stones. We boarded her five times and could not keep her fast. The sixth time of boarding we had a fire grapline <sup>25</sup> and chaine at our maine yard and fore yard arms, which we did let drop into her when she was alongst our side, and one of the Sanganians with his Simmeter with 3 or 4 blowes cutt the chaine and she fell astarne without our entering a man. At 6 in the evening we boarded her the seventh time, being in a readiness to board and to enter in him. She was alongst our side. Our gunner raised the mouth of a gun in the West <sup>26</sup> and fired into her, being loden with double head and round[shot]. Leftenant Bings with 9 more entered and had a hard dispute, but they was concorers. The ship drove astarne, and before we could send the longboat to them, she sunke and we saved all our men, only Mr. Christopher Mason which has the King's letter and one man More which had reseved mortall wounds being disabled of strength and drowned. Leftenant Bings reseved two gangarous [? dangerous] cutts on the small of his back. At 8 we came to anchor in sight of the ship, for the head of her mast was above watter. No sooner was our anchor down, but we did perseve a great many blacks hanging on our ships ties and wales. <sup>27</sup> We got candles in lanthorns and brought them all into the ship to the number of 40 men and boys, plasing them fore and aft on the deck a both sides, then seized [tied] their legs and arms one unto another, keeping a good watch over them at night, we haveing fair weather and a small gale."

A FIGHT AT 'CLOSE QUARTERS,' 1686.

Every man on board a ship in the old days, whether a sailor or not, was expected to give his assistance in time of danger, the sailors themselves being regularly exercised at the guns and the whole crew in the use of the small arms (i.e. fire-arms) and the cutlass. In a merchant-ship of the 17th century the Supercargo was a very important person. He represented the owners, and in many matters even the captain was subject to his authority. Often he was an old sea-captain himself.<sup>39</sup> It is not therefore very strange that in the following instance Mr. Richard Salvey (or Salwey), when the Captain and Chief Mate had been killed, should have taken command during the rest of the fight. What is most worthy of remark is that, though dangerously wounded comparatively early in the day, he refused to have his wound dressed and kept the deck until the enemy sheered off.

Again, in these times ships were not merely floating batteries. They were actual fortresses with, as it were, citadels to which the defenders could retire when the enemy had forced the outer works. These citadels were known technically as 'close quarters' and were formed by strong barriers running across the breadth of the ship and separating the Forecastle and the Quarterdeck from the Waist or middle part, which in a frigate-built ship was some feet lower. These barriers were provided with loopholes from which the defenders could fire upon the enemy who had entered the ship. So a fight under these conditions was what was properly called a fight at close quarters. If the defenders were absolutely determined not to surrender, they could continue the fight even after the citadels were taken, since they could, as in the case of the Spanish ship at Nagasaki (see No. V), betake themselves to the deck below and then blow up with powder the enemy above them. In the case of the Bauden, the Roundhouse or Captain's cabin appears to have been at the after end of and above the Quarterdeck, beneath which on the level of the Waist were the Steerage and the Great Cabin, with a Companion leading from the Roundhouse to the Great Cabin. The Waist was commanded by the loopholes in the Forecastle and the Quarterdeck. Thus when the crew had retired to the Forecastle and Quarterdeck and the Captain and some picked men to the Roundhouse, they were all under cover in their Close Quarters, in which also were situated all the guns which they had mounted for use. These guns were only part of the armament of the Bauden, other guns having been sent down into the hold as soon as she had come sufficiently far south to be free from any danger of attack by the Barbary pirates, for up to this date the pirates from the West Indies and New England had hardly begun to make the Cape Verde Islands a field for fresh operations.

The fight narrated below is remarkable as one between single ships, pirates not much relishing single combats. Possibly Mr. Salvey was right in supposing that they had intended to get water and refreshments at Santiago. Once to leeward of these Islands it was not easy, at certain times of the year, to get back again. If this were so, they were probably desperate and thought they might risk an attack upon a small ship. From the Sloane MS. 3672 it appears that the Bauden was only of 170 tons and 16 guns and was carrying 29 men and 39 soldiers (probably recruits for the Company's garrisons in India). As we shall see, the Cesar (No. XI), Captain Edward Wright, was attacked by five pirate ships at once, but she was of 535 tons and 40 guns with 120 men and 116 soldiers.

Mr. Salvey supposed that he was attacked by the French pirate Trampoos, meaning presumably La Trompeuse, Captain Jean Hamlyn, but the Trompeuse had been destroyed by Captain Carlisle of H.M.S. Francis in August 1683.

It may be mentioned that the account of this fight, (Sloane MS. 3672), was left (on the 22nd October 1687) at Johanna, an island in the Comoros to the north of Madagascar, at which Indiamen often called, and a copy was there taken by one Nathaniel Warren who was on board of the Charles, Captain John Preston, which called at Johanna on the 17th August 1689.

" We set sail from St. Jago on board the Bauden Frigatt, John Cribbs Commander, on October the 20th/86 with 36 of the Company's soldiers, being bound for Bombay in India.

Upon the 20th [? 26th] October in North Latitude eight degrees about 6 in the morning we descried a saile to the westward upon our starboard quarter, about three leagues distant, standing as we stood, which our Commander and all of us concluded to be the same Dutch built ship that was plying into St. Jago when we were there, and that she was a Dutchman bound our way, in great want (as we conceived) of water and other refreshments, having bin putt by the Port, but we still kept our course with an easy gale, till at the last we had a small squall. We going right before it, brought him right astern of us about three leagues, and a small breeze coming sooner to him than to us, he seemed to fetch upon us, and about 8 of the clock we perceived his boate rowing after us (it being stark calme) which we concluded was to make known his wants; at which time we were not quite idle, but employed in handing up and loading our small arms. About 9 a clock their boate being come within hale of us, they lay upon their oars and hailed us in English, we answered of London bound for East India. We asking from whence they came, they answering from Rochill [Rochelle] bound for Brazill. They still kept without musquett shott of us and lay upon their oars, viewing us about half a quarter of an hour, after which wishing us a good voyage they made the best of their way to their ship, their boate being half between both ships.

We made use of our Prospective Glass to discover what she was, with which at last we perceived their ship to row with 12 oars<sup>40</sup> on a side or more. We then being confirmed in our opinion that he was a Rogue [i.e., a Pirate] made ready to receive him as such. We run out our guns double loaded with double and round shott, knocked down our cabbins<sup>41</sup> and all impediments, cleared our decks, slung our yards and fixed our powder chests,<sup>42</sup> two of which we placed on the forecastle and one upon our Poop, where we had powered melted butter and strowed Pease to make it slippery. We had also two dale boards struck full of ten-penny Nails with their points upward to prevent their boarding us. We had 4 great guns on our Quarterdeck, one of which we carried into the Roundhouse and levelled out of the Port in the doore to cleere [cover] our Quarterdeck, the others we spiked up, by reason the enemy should not turn them upon us. After which our Commander spoke some words to encourage the men, and every one went to his station.

<sup>41</sup> These were placed on both sides of the Steerage, and, in some cases, of the Great Cabin also. (John Smith. The Seaman's Grammar, 1692).

<sup>42</sup> These were intended to be fired like a kind of mine, when the decks were crowded by the enemy.

About 12 of the clock their ship had gott the weather gage of us and came rangeing up our starboard quarter with French colours flying. The enemy being within musquett shott of us, upon our Boatswaines windeing his Call, we beate our Drum and gave them three cheers. They being come nigher abroadside of us, our Master called to him to bear under our stern<sup>43</sup> or else he would fire upon him, upon which one from their boltspritt end in a commanding manner called to us to hoist out our boate and come aboard of them. Our Commander replied he should not do that, but if they had any business with us, their boate being out, they might come aboard. After which one from aboard of them in broken English said, 'We'r bound aboard of you.' Our Master replied 'Wellcome, win her and ware her.'

No sooner were these words spoken but they sent a volley of small shott into us, which did little harme, upon which our Master and Mr. Salvey fired twice apiece from the Quarter-deck and went to their close quarters in the Roundhouse, and our men giving them a volley from the Waste, retired half of them into the Stearidge (according to order) and the other half into the Forecastle, excepting one, being a soldier, who was shott dead entring the Forecastle doore, which was all the enemy see fall of our men.

We being in close quarters, they in the Forecastle brought their aftermost great gun to bear upon the enemys bow, which they fired and see doe execution. Whereupon they run us aboard with their boltspritt in our main shrowds, at which time wee discharged both our Stearidge guns, being loaded with double round and Partridge<sup>44</sup> shott, which made her salley,<sup>45</sup> upon which the enemy made a great outcry and veered so far astern that they brought their boltspritt into our mizen shrowds and lashed fast to our chain plates,<sup>46</sup> by reason of which we could not bring our Forecastle guns to bear upon them.

All this time they continued firing upon us with their great and small guns, as we upon them. After which the enemy commanded his men to enter us, which they seemed eager to doe, by comeing on their boltspritt and others creeping up our side, where they made a halt, which gave us oppertunity as well from our loopholes as otherwise to doe great execution. Some of their men run up our shrowds, endeavouring to cutt down our yards, but findeing them slung with chains, they were discouraged. They that wert up were either shott down and fell in the sea or else went down on the other side and swam round to their ship, they not dareing to enter upon our Quarterdeck, seeing us traverse our great guns upon them out of the Roundhouse doore. Neither did they dare to board us on our Poop by reason of our powder chest and other provision made there. Their Commander from on board earnestly pressed them to enter us, but they found our ship too hot for them. They still continued fireing upon us, their cheif aime being att our Roundhouse, Great Cabbin and Stearidge, through which they fired three great shott, endeavouring to kill our Captain and sett fire to a powder chest, which att the last they accomplished.

Upon its blowing up, the enemy made a great shout and, reasuming courage, entered upon our Poop and with their Poleaxes [endeavoured] to cutt down the Antient Staff.

<sup>43</sup> To do this was considered a confession of inferiority or submission. So also it was the duty of the inferior to send his boat to the ship of his superior. When pirates could induce a merchant captain to send a boat aboard, they generally detained the crew and sent the boat back crowded with their own men who, especially if the merchant captain had come with the boat, usually met with no resistance.

<sup>44</sup> Partridge was some kind of small shot, possibly what is now known as Swan or Duck shot.

but our men from our Forecastle and loopholes upon the Quarterdeck fired thick upon them, soe that they obleided them to desist, and their liveing [i.e., those left alive] instead of cutting into us were employed to dispatch their dead out of our sight, but they left one aboard us thus armed (besides severall guns, pistols, catutch<sup>47</sup> boxes &c. which we took up, the enemy haveing lett them fall when wounded). He had a long Fuzee, 7 foot in the Barrell, 2 Pistolls, one scimeter, one poleaxe, one stinkpott, a catutch box with 23 charges of powder and Bullett for his Fuzee, with lines [ropes] to bind us back to back,<sup>48</sup> which some of our men heard their Commander from aboard bid them take with them.

Our Master comeing out the Roundhouse into the Great Cabbin to encourage the men received a mortall wound in his groine, and so soone as he returned, which was about two a clock, he received another mortall shott in his right Papp, which came through his back, he dyeing within half an hour afterwards. After which Mr. Salvey, tho' very dangerously wounded, encouraged the men to stand to it, and went not downe to be drest till the enemy putt off, tho' he had received his wound before one of the clock.

About this time [2 o'clock] the enemys struck his ensigne, as we all beleived his Captain was then killed and they had received a shott from us between wind and water. They still continued to fire upon us till about 4 a clock, when we brought one of our guns to bear upon them double loaded with double round and Partridge (the other being dismantled), upon the firing of which there was another outcry heard in their ship, att which time they cutt loose from us, their ship being fallen astern. Our Cheif Mate going into the Cabbin to fire att them received his mortall wound [in his head] by a small shott<sup>49</sup> from the enemy.

We haveing thus cleered ourselves of them, our men gott upon the Poop and beateing our Drum bravely, gave them a what cheer ho.<sup>50</sup> Att which time it began to blow fresh and rain hard, the enemy makeing all the saile they could, when we employed ourselves in mending our rigging, &c., which were much damnified, the enemy haveing shott above a thousand small and great shott into us. They being out of shott of us brought their ship upon the Carine<sup>51</sup> to stop her leak.

All the night we busied ourselves in refitting, outrigging and knocking out our gunroom ports, which were calked up, that if it should prove calme the next day we might be able to run out those guns, by the help of which we did not dout but in a little time to make him yeild or sink, but the next morning, so soon as day broke, we looking out for him (it being calme) found by the help of his oars he was gott so far off that we could but just discern him from Topmast head, but if it had proved a gale we should have bin able to have given a better account of him, though we had struck down into our holds severall of our great guns, as was usuall in those Latitudes, and he boarded us so advantageously that we could never bring but 3 guns to bear upon him, which with our small arms did much execution. We judge this Rogue to be Trampoos the French Pirate, in a ship of about 300 tons and might carry 30 guns, but she played from her larboard side with not above 12 guns upon us, being so nigh that most of their small shott came through us.

Tis judged by all that there were above 250 of those rogues aboard this Pirate, and by computation we killed at least sixty of them; to the number of 20 we see fall and might have seen more had they not bin to windward of us, which caused the smoke of the guns to hinder our sight.

We lost in this engagement our Commander, Cheife Mate and 6 more with 16 wounded, their names as followeth, John Cribb Commander, John Allen Cheife Mate, John Bristow, John Beneto Sergeant, John Adamson, Moses Jones, William Jones, Tim Rymer [or Trimer] killed, Mr. Richard Salvey, Mr. Benjamin Henry, Mr. Robert Bathurst, Nath. Branguin Purser, Adam Bushell Gunner, Swan Swanson Boatswaine, James Farlee Quartermaster, Thomas Bodey, Has. Fabeen, James James, Richard Booth, Philip Cockram, Henry Godfrey, William Smith, Richard Dragger, Albert Nasbett wounded, of all which Mr. Salvey is most dangerous.

The enemy by the help of the oars being out of sight of us, we reofficered our ship, makeing Mr. Baker Master who was Second Mate, with severall other officers according to their course[seniority] and desert. So God send us to our desired Port in safety. Amen!"

SUCCESSFUL DEFENCE OF THE CÆSAR, 31ST OCTOBER 1686.

Towards the end of the 17th century the Buccaneers, who had previously practised their profession in the West Indies and the South Sea, began to find a great diminution in the number and value of their captures. Accordingly they turned their attention to the East. Some sailed across the Pacific to the Philippines and thence through the Straits to the Bay of Bengal, as we shall see in the next Episode (No. XII). Others sailed to the west coast of Africa, where they could obtain rich cargoes of slaves, gold-dust and ivory from the ships of the Royal African Company or, perchance, pick up a fine haul of treasure from an outward bound vessel of the East India Company or an equally valuable prize of India goods from one on its return voyage. It is true that these ships were well found, armed and manned, but the pirates sailed in small fleets and had the advantage of numbers. In the attack on the Cæsar it will be seen that the pirates hoisted red or bloody colours and with a little more courage and persistence would probably have been successful.

"True and exact account of an engagement maintained by the ship Caesar, Captain Edward Wright Commander, against five ships (pirates) in sight of the Island St. Jago<sup>23</sup> on Sunday the last day of October 1686.

" We presume your Honours were advised of our safe tho' late arrival at St. Jago the 26th October, where having refreshed our men as usually, on Sunday following being the last day of the month by sunrising we were got under sail and had scarce opened the weathermost of the Road when we had sight of five ships lying by under their sails, waiting our coming, as we found afterwards, for they no sooner espied us but gave chase, crowding all the sail they could possible make after us. We were upon imag[in]ing the worst, and likewise made sail for the gaining time to put ourselves in the best posture we could for defence, which we did by staving down and heaving overboard everything we imagined might be the least hindrance to us. We lined our Quarters with our men's bedding, slung our yards and distributed all our small arms to the shouldiers, sending some in our tops. We then visited each several ports [? post] to see all things fitted and contrived for our utmost advantage, omitting nothing we could imagine in the least requisite on so pressing an occasion, and now, perceiving they gained on us apace and that we had already done all that men in our condition could possibly do both for defending ourselves and offending the enemy, our Captain, by the advice and consent of us all, commanded our small sailes to be handed, and our maine saile and mizell (sic) to be furled, putting the ship right afore the wind (concluding it absolutely the best manner so to engage) and then exhorting our men to be of good courage, telling them what an eternall credit wee should gaine to ourselves and nation by baffling the designs and attempts of soe many and such subtile enemys and on the contrary what a miserable life would be the consequence of falling into the hands of such desperate, pyratieall villains. With such like exhortation all were dismissed to their severall quarters.

"And by this time being about 10 in the morning two of the nimblest were come up with us, haveing (as the rest had) French colours. The headmost firing three or four shott at us and finding wee slighted him, changed his French to bloody colours,<sup>43</sup> and then stretching to windward, they lay peckeing at us whilst his companion was doing the same aterne, whom our chase gunns, from the great cabbin, soon brought upon the cairne [? careen], which wee had scarce done, when the other three ships had got our length (having changed their French to bloody colours) firing on us amaine. These were ships of burthen and could not have lesse than between 20 and 30 gunns each and full of men. The Admirall and Vice-Admirall<sup>44</sup> on the larboard side designing to lay us on board, which the frmer did on our quarter, but we plyed him so warmly with our small shott, which we showered on him like haile from our tops, poop and other posts, that wee heard indeed a voice crying to us in the French tongue to surrender, but say [? saw] none bold enough to try for possession, but were glad to gett cleare of us againe, and falling aterne sunk and cutt away all our boats, which he paid for by the losse of his boltsplite [bowsprit] and abundance of his men. His hull at the same time not being impenitrable to our great shott wee plaid in and thro him. The Vice-Admirall on the bowe had a shortt entertainment and noe better successe, for we spoake some [? soe] much terroure to him from our foreceastle and other quarters (he haveing likewise our frequent cheers and hurahs) bore away in affright, and by that means had the luck to receive both our broadsides, which carried away his foreyards and mixin masts, whilst our stern chase (for now we had got our gunroome gunns out) soe gave the rest aterne that after five hours sharpe ingagement they began to beare away to amend and repaier the damage received from us.

"Which questionless was very considerable, there men, at first comeing up, being bold and daring, lay open to our small shott which continued firing for three hours together without the least intermission, and there men loading there great guns without board (as is the custome of these West India gunner pyrates) were cut of as fast as they appeared to doe there duty, and this was the reason they fired but few great gunns when they bore down upon us, for which we are beholden unto our small fire armes, and indeed all our men in general behaived themselves like Englishmen and shewed much courage and bravery. But our small armes (we mean your Honours' disciplined shouldiers and there officers, whose example they see well imitated, we cannot forbear to mention in particular), who fired see nimbley and with see much skill and caution of placing there shott to purpose that wee must acknowledge as there due and meritt a large share of the glory and honour of this days action.

<sup>44</sup> These high titles were in common use even by merchant ships (all armed for defence) when three or more were sailing in company, as they often did for mutual protection.

"Wee now brought too to see if wee could save our Barge which wee toed asterne full of water, but finding it not worth our while sent her adrift after the rest of the boats, and then continued our course with an easie saile imag[ining] nothing else but they would have the other bout with us, but they were all bussie upon the Carine, likeing [i] licking them whole <sup>55</sup> as well as they could.

"Finding wee were to have noe more of it, wee now began to examine into the damage already sustained by [from] them and found, as hath already been hinted, all our boats lost, 3000 cwt. of bread hove overboard to cleare our gunroom gunns (and wee had been happy and they unfortunate could wee have plaied our whole gunn deck tyre, but being see deep wee derstent open never a port between deck save our sterne-chase, which however did us no small kindness) a great shott through our boltsprit, four of our main shrowes cut and much of our running rigging, our sailes full of holes, a shott or two throughour hull and many sticking in our sides.

"They were eager to strike our ancient [ensign] with there guns seeing they could not do itt otherwayes, and made severall shott for that purpose, but wee, knowing there custome, had ordered it to be seized, [fastened] <sup>56</sup> to the head of the staffe, mistrusting [suspecting] should they by any meanes strike our colours it might by encourageing them add to there advantage. Wee found but one man killed, by name Jno. Stiffe, a shouldier, and eight wounded, a wonderfull deliverance. Wee conclude the day with offerings of thanks and prays to Him who had so miraculously preserved us in the midst of see great danger. This being a moderate account of the days actions, wee have nothing else worth your Honours notice save assurances of our continuall care and circumspection for the discharge of that great trust reposed in us, and wee hope this plaine account will be a lasting testimony and demonstration of the fidelity of

Your Honours

EPIGRAPHIC NOTES.

BY N. G. MAJUMDAR, B.A.: CALCUTTA.

1.—Mañchapuri Cave Inscription of the time of Khāravela.

THIS inscription was first edited by Pandit Bhagwanlal Indraji as early as 1885 (Actes Six. Congr. Or. à Leide, Part III, Sect. II, p. 1771, No. 2 and Plate). In 1912 it was noticed by Prof. Lüders in his List of Brāhmī Inscriptions (El., Vol. X, App., No. 1346). Its latest edition and interpretation are by Mr. R. D. Banerji in El., Vol. XIII, pp. 159-60 and Plate. Recently however, Mr. K. P. Jayaswal in the Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society, Vol. IV, p. 366, has proposed certain improvements upon Mr. Banerji's reading and has attempted to interpret it also differently. It is to be noted that Mr. Banerji appears to have generally followed Prof. Lüders, in his edition of the record. Mr. Jayaswal's total disagreement with both these scholars therefore, makes it highly desirable that we should examine the question again and see how far we can agree in his conclusions.

The object of it is to record (according to Prof. Lüders and Mr. Banerji) the establishment of a cave (lena) for the Kāliga (Kāliṅga) monks (samana) in honour of the Arahanta, (Arhats) by the chief queen (aga-mahisī) of [Siri-Khāra]vēla, emperor of Kaliga (Kaliṅga) and daughter of rājan Lālaka, great-grandson of Hathisiṇha (Hastisiṇha), or Hastisāha or Hastisāhasa (according to Mr. Banerji).—Mr. Jayaswal contends that the queen referred to, has her name mentioned also in the inscription and he claims to have discovered it. On p. 369, foot-note, of JBORS., Vol. IV, he says : "It is considered that she is unnamed in the inscription. What epigraphists have read as dhutund, seems to me to be Dhut[i]nd which would be another Prākṛit form of Dhrishṭi. She was daughter of Lālaka (Lālārka),<sup>2</sup> who was son of Hastin, who again was son of Hansa. This last has been missed by the editors of the inscription (El., Vol. XIII, p. 159). It has been erroneously read with the preceding Hathisa, from which it is really separated by space. The anusvara on Ha is very, very clearly incised. The supposed name Hathisāhasa would be absurd, meaning a 'coward'. The words are to be read (and I read them on the spot) : L[d] lakasa Hathisa Hansapapotasa." To make the above statement clear it must be said that the word Dhrishṭi to which Mr. Jayaswal refers, as the name of the queen of Khāravela, and which is transformed to Dhuti in the Mañchapuri inscription, has been again found by him in l. 7 of the large inscription of Khāravela incised on the Hāthigumphā cave.<sup>3</sup> And there, the form is not Dhuti but Dhisi which would be, according to him, another Prākṛit form of the original word Dhrishṭi. The possibility of reading the queen's name will be taken up later. First, let us see, whether we could be absolutely certain in regard to the proposed readings. In the place of Hathisāhasa-papōtasa Mr. Jayaswal reads Hathisa Hansa-papōtasa. Now, on reference to the plate published by Mr. Banerji, it appears that Mr. Jayaswal's reading is quite inadmissible. The ā-stroke on the sa of Ha thi sa is very carefully incised, and perhaps too clear to be set aside by any stretch of imagination. But unfortunately, the aforesaid scholar has overlooked even such a bold stroke as this and read the word as Hathisa, taking it to be the genitive singular form of Hastin. Then again, the anusvāra on the ha of Ha sa is according to Mr. Jayaswal 'very, very clearly incised,' but as a matter of fact, however, it is a mere mark, and to hastily read it as anusvāra seems to me to be rather hazardous. Mr. Jayaswal reads dhuti instead of dhutu, thinking apparently, that it would be to his advantage in equating it with Dhṛishṭi, the alleged name of Khāravela's queen. But in the first place, the reading of the medial vowel i instead of u is doubtful, as the letter ta itself is a blurred one. And secondly, even admitting Mr. Jayaswal's emendation, both the forms dhuti and dhutu would be, in the Prākṛit phonetics, easily derivable from duhṛiṭi.<sup>4</sup> There are also serious philological difficulties in the way of our accepting that the form Dhṛishṭi could have been transformed to dhuti, to judge from the Prākṛit of the Hāthigumphā inscription. Nowhere in this record does a conjunct shṭa change itself to ta. In every place it becomes pha, e.g., Raṣṭhika (Rāshṛika) in l. 8, and aphame (aṣṭame) in l. 7. On the analogy of these and similar other instances I do not think it cogent to hold that dhuti or dhutu is equivalent to Dhṛishṭi. But even if we accept for the sake of argument the readings of Mr. Jayaswal, the inscription would scarcely give any sense.<sup>5</sup>

Turning to the question of interpretation, we find that Mr. Banerji takes Lālākasa dhutunā in the sense of '(by) the daughter (of) Lālāka. Dhutunā according to him stands in apposition to agamahisinā in l. 3; and the latter he takes along with Khāravelasa in l. 2 which is in the genitive case. The meaning, provided Mr. Banerji's reading is correct, should stand therefore thus: 'by Lālāka's daughter, queen of Khāravela'. Lālāka is again qualified by the expression Hathisāhasa-papotasa, i.e., great-grandson of Hathisāhasa. Mr. Jayaswal takes dhutunā as instrumental of the word denoting the name of the queen and separates Hathisa (sic.) from Hamea-papotasa. The most curious thing to notice here is, that the scholar who does so, pari passu holds that, "She was daughter of Lālāka (Lālārka) who was son of Hastin, who again was son of Hamea"—a procedure which I fail to understand. Where is the word for 'daughter' we may rightly ask, when once the word dhutu is taken in a different sense, and what is the evidence for taking Hathisa in the sense of 'son of Hastin', and what purpose again does the genitive case of Lālāka serve? The interpretation as well as the reading of Mr. Jayaswal appears therefore to be purely conjectural.<sup>6</sup>

2.—A Passage in the Inscriptions of the Maltrakas of Valabhi.

The following passage which occurs at the beginning of almost every inscription of the Valabhi dynasty in reference to their first ruler Senāpati Bhaṭakka has not yet been adequately explained:—

Maula-bhṛita-mitra-ireṇī-bal-āvāpta-rājyasirik.

Fleet in his Gupta Inscriptions (pp. 167-8) translated it as follows: 'who acquired the goddess of royalty through the strength of the array of (his) hereditary servants and friends.'

<sup>5</sup> Both Messrs. Banerji and Jayaswal agree in reading papotasa. But I do not find the e-stroke on the plate published by Mr. Banerji. The reading as it stands, is therefore, open to some doubt.

<sup>6</sup> Perhaps one of the reasons why he has attempted to read and interpret the passage differently is the fact, that the name of Lālāka's great-grandfather only, and not that of his grandfather, or of his father, appears in the record. This seems strange no doubt, but every inscription is to be interpreted as it is, without doing any violence to grammar.

The translation of Kielhorn is: 'who had acquired the splendour of royalty by his devoted army (which consisted) of hereditary servants, hired soldiers and men employed in posts'.<sup>7</sup> Dr. Hultzsch, in his paper on the Ganeigad plates of Dhruvasena I, has translated it as follows: 'who acquired the glory of royalty by the strength of a devoted body of hereditary servants, hired soldiers and friends'.<sup>8</sup> Dr. Sten Konow has again offered the following translation of it in editing the Palitana plates of Dhruvasena I: 'who obtained the glory of royalty by the strength of the array of devoted hereditary servants and friends'.<sup>9</sup> None of the above translations, however, appears to be satisfactory. The real meaning of the words Maula, Bhṛita, Mitra, Śreṣṭ and Bala is quite different from what scholars have hitherto supposed.

The passage in question has now to be interpreted in the light of the Mahābhārata and the Arthasāstra of Kauṭilya. The words mentioned above are all technical terms in Hindu Polity. According to it, Bala means 'army' which consisted of four kinds of troops, viz. Maula<sup>10</sup> (i.e. hereditary), Bhṛita (i.e. hired) Mitra (i.e. allied) and Śreṣṭ (i.e. guild). This is exactly what we get in the Mahābhārata :—

atari-balaṁ bhṛitaṁ chakṛiva tathā ireṣi-balaṁ prabho.*<sup>11</sup>

The passage in Kauṭilya also runs to the same effect—" Sa maula-bhṛita-ireṣi-mitr-āmītr-ātavi-balāṇāṁ sārāphalguṇāṁ vidyāt." p. 140 (cf. also p. 342).

The expression quoted at the head of this note had therefore been better translated thus, 'who (king) acquired the goddess of royalty (i.e. the kingdom) through the army (consisting of) hereditary, mercenary, allied and guild soldiers'. It has reference, as has been already said, to Bhaṣakka, a Senāpati, i.e., general, who founded the Valabhi dynasty. The passage shows that he raised himself to the throne by the army, and it further throws light on the part played by guilds in Ancient India, which have thus an exact parallel to the Italian guilds who also maintained armies.

3.—Śrāvastī and TarBkari of the Sillimpur Inscription.

This important record has been recently edited in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XIII, p. 283 ff. and Plate by Mr. Radhagovinda Basak. But before it was published in that Journal its contents were already familiar to scholars of Bengal, it being published by him in a Bengali monthly, and discussed by Mr. Ramaprasad Chanda, in his book called The Indo-Aryan Races (1916, pp. 170-71). The passage of the inscription which was the main basis of his discussion runs as follows :—

"Yeshām tasya Hiraṇyagarv(b) bha-vapushab-svāśga-prasūt-Aṅgiro-vanśe-janma samāna-gotra-vachan-otkarshō-Bharadvājstaḥ |

<sup>11</sup> This passage has been quoted by Dr. R. C. Majumdar in his Corporate Life in Ancient India, p. 13, n. 19.

 Tat-prasūtaścha Puṇḍreshu Sakatī-vyavadhānavān |
 Varendri-maṇḍanam grāmō Vā(Bā)ja-grāma iti śrutah" | --II. 2—4.

The description embodied in the above verses, is of the place where the donee lived. This is a village called Bālagrāma which was situated in Varendri, in the Puṇḍra country. It further appears that this village must have had some connection with a place called Tarkkārī which is described as Śrāvastī-pratīvadāha, i.e., situated within the limits of Śrāvastī. It should be noted that Tarkkārī is mentioned in the record first, and next comes Bālagrāma, the latter being qualified by the phrase tat-prasūta, i.e., 'born of that' which can only mean offshoot of, or a young colony from, Tarkkārī. The full significance of it becomes clear when we find it described as a well-known (viditā) centre of Brahmans who were ever devoted to Vedic rites. The inference seems natural therefore, that the nucleus of the Brahmanic community of Bālagrāma was a settlement of Brahmans who had emigrated from Tarkkārī. Now this Tarkkārī, as has been stated above, was in Śrāvastī.

But where was this Śrāvastī? Is it the same as the Śrāvastī of the Gonda district, now known as Saheth-Maheth, or a different one altogether? The very fact that there is here recorded a Brahman emigration from Śrāvastī, which we find in other inscriptions too, would seem to indicate that it is identical with the Śrāvastī of the Madhyadesa. But Messrs. Ghanda and Basak hold a quite different opinion. They contend that it is to be identified with a Śrāvastī of the Gauḍadesa, i.e. Bengal, which, according to them, is mentioned in the Matsya and the Kurma Purāṇas.<sup>12</sup> Thus the former writes in his Indo-Aryan Races, pp. 170-71: "In this record it is said that a place called Tarkkārī, forming a part of Śrāvastī, was the original home of the Brahmans of the Bhāradvāja gotra. In the Puṇḍra country there was a village called Bālagrāma which was 'the ornament of Varendri'. Between Bālagrāma and Tarkkārī lay Sakatī.<sup>13</sup> Mr. Radha Gōvinda Basak . . . regards Sakatī as the name of a river and places Śrāvastī of the record within Puṇḍra (Varendri). In the early Sanskrit literature we meet with two cities called Śrāvastī—one founded by Lava, son of Rāma (Rāmāyana, VII) and another by Śrāvastī in Gauḍadesa (Matsya Purāṇa, XII, 30). Cunningham regarded both the Śrāvastīs as identical and identified Gauḍadesa with the Gonda District of Oudh. But in all other texts and records Gauḍa is applied to Varendra in Bengal or to Bengal as a whole. So it seems more reasonable to identify the Gauḍa of the Purāṇas with Varendra or Bengal, and recognise in the Śrāvastī of Śrāvastī an ancient city in Bengal which was separated from Bālagrāma of this record by Sakatī."

But let us examine whether the location of Śrāvastī within the Varendra-bhūmi is deducible from the construction of the verses quoted above. Messrs Basak and Chanda say that between Bālagrāma and Tarkkāri lay the river Sakaṭi. This is how they understand the expression Sakaṭi-vyavadhāna which qualifies Bālagrāma. But in accepting this there are certain grave difficulties. In the first place, if the two villages had been situated side by side (the distance between them being only a river), and if it be true that some Brahman families, who had formerly been living on one bank of the stream, now came to settle on the other, it would have been quite out of place to describe their former home in the terms in which Tarkkāri has been described. Were the two places topographically so closely connected, no sensible writer would have ever thought of specifying their separate topographical details, viz., that one of them—Tarkkāri is Śrāvastī-prativaddha, i.e., in Śrāvastī, and the other—Bālagrāma is in Puṇḍra and Varendrī. Secondly, the expression Sakaṭi-vyavadhāna is an adjective of Bālagrāma. Therefore, it cannot have anything to do with Tarkkāri, which word is at a long distance; and the expression cannot be taken to mean that Sakaṭi was the vyavadhāna between Bālagrāma and Tarkkāri. The very nature of the compound shows that the vyavadhāna is in reference to Bālagrāma alone. I therefore suggest that the natural meaning would be, 'the village of Bālagrāma which had for its boundary, or was bounded by, the river Sakaṭi.'<sup>1</sup>

It follows therefore, that there is scarcely any real ground for thinking that Tarkkāri was in Bengal. On the other hand, a mass of evidence goes to show that a place called Tarkkārikā or Tarkkāri did exist in Upper India. We learn from epigraphic records that it was a well-known centre of Brahmanic culture and many Brahman families, formerly living there, emigrated to other parts of India. Among these records, the number of which is by no means small, may be mentioned, (1) the Katak copper-plate of the 31st year of Mahābhavagupta I, Et., Vol. III, p. 348, (2) the Katak copper-plate of the 9th year of Mahāśivagupta, Ibid., p. 353, (3) the Kalas-Badrakh copper-plate of Bhīllama III (A.D. 1025), Ante, Vol. XVII, p. 118, (4) a copper-plate of the Chandella Madanavarman, Ante, Vol. XVI, 208, (5) a copper-plate of the Chandella Dhāṅgadeva, Ibid. p. 204 and (6) the Māndhātā copper-plates of Devapāla and Jayavarman II, Et., Vol. IX, p. 103 ff. Now to determine whether the Tarkkāri mentioned in these inscriptions was in or outside Bengal, one has to turn attention to Nos. 2 and 3. In the former we have the following adjective-clause appended to the name of a Brahman donee: Madhyadeśīya-Śrīvallagrāma-ve(vi)ṇirggatāya Odra-deśe Śrī-Śilābhāṇjapāti-vāstavyāya | Takkārapūrva-Bhāradvājagotrāya. It is clear from this that he came out of a village in the Madhyadeśa and belonged to a family of Bhāradvājagotra Brahmins which was formerly in Takkāra. This Takkāra, as

Fleet has shown, is but another form of the original word Tarkkārīkā (EI., Vol. III, p. 350, n. 13 and p. 354). The natural conclusion is therefore, that Tarkkāra or Takkara was in the Madhyadeśa. This is strongly confirmed by No. 3 which distinctly and unmistakably says that Takkarikā (Tarkkārīkā), a bhaṭṭa village, was situated in the Madhyadeśa—śrī-Madhyadeśi-āntah-pāṭi-Takkārīkā-bhaṭṭagrāma-vinirgyata. Now as Madhyadeśa did never include Bengal, it naturally follows that Tarkkāri (which was in Madhyadeśa) was outside Bengal.<sup>15</sup> We may therefore, summarise our results as follows:—

(1) There was a famous place called Tarkkārīkā, in the Madhyadeśa.

(2) It was a well-known centre of holy Brahmans.

(3) And thence many Brahman families emigrated to the East and South.

I therefore see no objection to identifying this Tarkkārīkā with the one mentioned in the Silimpur inscription which places it within Śrāvastī, which certainly formed a part of the Madhyadeśa.

PAISĀCHĪ PRĀKRIT.

BY THE LATE S. P. V. RANGANATHASWAMI ARYAVARAGUN; VIZAGAPATAM.

IN his Prākṛita-kalpataru, Rāmatarkavāgīśa-bhaṭṭāchārya mentions the following eleven Pāisāchīs:—

वैशाचिकं केकदशुरेणसञ्ज्ञातमौदप्रभव कवेण ।

समागभन्नाचदसूभनेवं भाषाविशुद्धं मतमर्धशुद्धम् ।

What strikes us at first as peculiar is that the author of Kalpataru included the mixture of dialects under the Pāisāchī. He arrives at the eleven languages given in the above verses in the following way: He at first divides the Pāisāchī into two great classes, pure (śuddha) and mixed (saṁkīrtita). Under the first head he included the following seven dialects:

Kekaya

Pāñchāla

Māgadhā

Sākshambheda

Sārasena

Gauḍa

Vrāchāḍa

The mixed dialects he divides into two classes again, viz., pure (śuddha) and impure (aiśuddha), the former of which he again divides into two classes bhāṣā-śuddha and pada-śuddha, which latter he once more divides into two classes, viz., ardha-śuddha and chatuspāda-śuddha, thus making the mixed dialects four in all. The mixture of dialects in a stanza may take any of the forms given below. The stanza may assume the same form for each of the dialects or one-half of it may be in one language and the other half in another, or again each pāda may be in a different language or once more the words in the verses may be of different languages and mixed after the fashion of tila-taḥḥa as Rāmatarkavāgīśa says. These four classes he respectively designates by the above four names. As an example of the first class may be given the following stanza of

Rāmatarkavāgīśa himself, which he says can be construed as a verse in Sanskrit or any one of the fifty-five dialects treated of in his work (setting aside Pāñchāla Pāñśāchi).

कमलाकमलोल कमकलाकालोमलालीका ? ।

कलिकाल कालकलिलं मुखागो मोहकज्जोलम् ॥

This stanza is given here as it is found in the MS. of the work found in the India Office Library, but is very corrupt. A similar stanza, quoted in Sāhitya-darpaṇa<sup>2</sup> may also be cited and it is said to be identical in form for Sanskrit, Sāurasenī, Prāchyā, Avantī and Nāgarāpabhraṇṣa :—

मञ्जुलवणिमन्त्रीरे कलमन्त्रीरे विहारसरसीरीरे ।

विरसासि केलिकीरे किमालि धीरे च गन्धसारसरीरे ॥

The following stanzas illustrate the second class. The first two are taken from Rāmatarkavāgīśa's work, the first of which is his own while the second is quoted by him as belonging to another. The third, on the other hand, is quoted from Bhoja's Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa :—

भारेण विरहसिंहिनी मणीसु सभनेसु कुडिभषडिप्सु ।

कण्ठे केवलसूत्रं विरहिण्याः कण्ठपादद्वय ॥

जयति जननानिवाञ्छितफलप्रदः कल्पपादपौ गिरिषः ।<sup>3</sup>

जम्भइ मदमारुहन्ती<sup>4</sup> गिरितपसा पण्डकपलभा ॥

नीप्सप्रोक्तानि वाक्यानि विहङ्गकेषु घेरते ।

गोसे तिरिञ्छिरिञ्छोली<sup>5</sup> तद्वत्तुदे विवक्षिता ॥

There seems to be a slip in the MS. of Kalpataru belonging to the India Office since there are no verses to exemplify the third and fourth classes. The following verse from Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa may be quoted in illustration of the fourth class :—

अकट गुपटी चन्द्रचोत्सनाकलं किल कोहली ।

लवङ्ग अमुह्योन्मो वायुनिवारय वाइभ ॥

अवि सखि अला रक्ताशोकस्तथापि मनो मुदे ।

नकज नकजं मानेनाद्यपिचं प्रतिजाइश ॥

In the above classification Rāmatarkavāgīśa-Bhaṭṭāchārya designates the mixture of the dialects to Pāñśāchi and we may for our purposes leave them out of account without examining the appropriateness or otherwise of the title and say that he recognised only seven dialects under Pāñśāchi. Mārkaṇḍeya, on the other hand, excludes these mixed dialects but his scruples not permitting him, he could not abandon the traditional number eleven and so gives a list of another eleven (differing from the list of Kalpataru), including some of the South Indian dialects, to make up that number. But he adds that of these only three, viz., Kākaya, Sāurasena and Pāñchāla were civilised, the rest being of no importance. He considers Saṅkīrṇa (or mixed) dialects as an independent class and says<sup>6</sup> that if those and Sanskrit are taken into account, the number of Prākṛit dialects will be altogether eighteen.

Sir George Grierson in his paper<sup>7</sup> on The Home of Literary Pāli says, "Rāmārkavāgīśa (17th century) knows two Pāisāchikas, one Kāikeya and the other (!) Chaska. He adds that if other Prākṛit dialects, e.g. Māgadhi, are used incorrectly, they become aiuddha Pāisāchika." From the above exposition of Rāmārkavāgīśa's classification of Pāisāchī dialects, we confess we cannot accede to what Sir George says in his paper referred to above. There is only one copy of Prākṛita-kalpataṛa (that in the India Office Library, that I know of, and it is in Bengālī characters and is very corrupt, so much so, that it is impossible to make out the meaning of the passages in certain places. The verse about the classification of Pāisāchī languages, as it stands in the MS., is:—

वैद्यानिकानि विविधानि शुद्धसङ्कीर्णभेदेन पुरोहितानि ।
सवादि समकमव शुद्धं सङ्कीर्णमन्वन्तु चतुष्कनाहः ॥<sup>8</sup>

The second line of which is evidently very corrupt. As it stands it makes no sense and there is violation of metre too. Here chaska is a mistake for chatushka, the tu being lost. The line should run—

सवादिमं समकमव शुद्धं संकीर्णमन्वन्तु चतुष्कनाहः ।

which is quite in accord with the stanza quoted at the beginning of the paper, and the metre of which works out alright. So there is no question there of Chaska Pāisāchī. It was not possible for me to trace the origin of Sir George Grierson's other remark: "He adds that if other Prākṛit dialects, e.g. Māgadhi, are used incorrectly they become aiuddha Pāisāchika." Probably he derives the information from the following:—

तिलतण्डुलवयसा तु भाषाः प्रविशन्तीह बहुप्रकारमुक्ताः ।

but this means what I said above.

There is another short treatise on the Pāisāchī dialects (which, however, it calls bhūta-bhāṣā) in the Deccan College Library, Poona. It is named Shāḍbhāṣā-vārtika, is in old Kashmiri characters and is Nos. 295-6 of the collection of 1875-76. In this work too the Pāisāchī Prākṛit is divided into two classes, pure (iuddha) and mixed (saakīrṇa) in the following verse:—

प्राकृताज्जायते भूतभाषा सा च द्विधा यथा ।
शुद्धा चैव हि सङ्कीर्णा किञ्चिद्वैवसयन्विता ॥ and he defines the two classes as under:—

शुद्धायां भूतभाषायां भाषा समुपपत्तिता । and सङ्कीर्णभूतभाषायादानपञ्चनेन संयुता । भूतभाषैव भवति किञ्चिद्वैवसयन्विता ॥ and here too we do not find any class termed Chaska.

Hemachandra, in his grammar treats of six Prākṛits, viz., Prākṛitā, Sāurasenī, Māgadhi, Pāisāchī, Chūlikā-pāisāchī and Apabhraṃśa, and hence he has only two Pāisāchī dialects. Lakshmidhara also knows only two Pāisāchīs:—

विद्यानदेष्टानिवर्तं वैद्यानीहितवं भवेत् ।

Sir George Grierson remarks in the same paper<sup>10</sup> that Hemachandra knew three Pāisāchīs. He says "Hemachandra knew three but does not say where they were spoken." I could verify this statement neither in Hemachandra's grammar nor in his Kāvyaśūśrūṣa.

MISCELLANEA.

DATE OF KHARAVĒLA.

In connection with the date of Siri-Sātakarṇi named in an inscription on the South Gate of Stūpa No. I at Sāśchi, Mr. Ramaprasad Chanda of the Calcutta University writes as follows in his recently published Memoir on the "Dates of the Votive Inscriptions on the Stūpas at Sāśchi" (Memoir A. S. I., No. 1, pp. 8-12):—

The date of this Siri-Sātakarṇi, and consequently that of the south gateway of stūpa I at Sāśchi, may be approximated by working out the date of the Udayagiri (Hāthigumphā) inscription of Khāravēl in which a Sātakarṇi is also mentioned. Bhagavanlal Indrajī, who has published what may be called the editio princeps of the Hāthigumphā inscription, read and interpreted a sentence in its 10th line to mean that the 13th year of Khāravēl's reign corresponds to the year 165 current and 164 expired of the time of the Maurya Kings. Bhagavanlal was inclined to believe that the era begins with the eighth year of Aśoka, the year in which Aśoka conquered Kalinga, and taking 263 B.C. as the year of Aśoka's accession, placed the accession of Khāravēla in 103 B.C.<sup>1</sup> While accepting Bhagavanlal's reading and interpretation of the sentence, Bühler pushed back the initial year of the Maurya era to the year of Chandragupta's accession. This theory held the field till Fleet questioned the reading and interpretation of Bhagavanlal and declared, herein followed by Lüders, that "there is no date in the inscription."<sup>2</sup> But recently Messrs. Jayaswal and R. D. Banerji have published a revised version of the Hāthigumphā inscription with facsimiles and revived the theory of the Maurya era.<sup>3</sup> As the sentence has given rise to so much controversy I shall reproduce the different versions:—

Sanskrit.—Pāñcōttarashash(hicārshasat) Maurya-rājyabālṭ vēcchinnṣ cha chatuṣha-sh(hyagrata-takottar) chotpādayati.

English.—" (He) does (this) in the one hundred and sixty-fifth year of the time of Maurya kings after one hundred and sixty-four years had passed away."

Fleet reads sacha for saṁhi and takes panatariyasacha in the sense of panānatt-ariyasachcha, Sanskrit prajñāptāryasatya, and referring to texts propounding some Jain ariyasachchāni, "sublime truths." After rāja-Muriya-kālṭ Fleet reads and translates:—vēcchinnṣ cha chōyafha a (or ? am) gasatikutariya ch = upādayati. Vēcchinnṣ (vyavachchhinnāni) chōyafha amga-sattik-antariyaṁ ch = upādayati: "and he produces, causes to come forth (i.e., revives), the sixty-fourth chapter (or other division) of the collection of seven Aṅgas."<sup>4</sup>

Mr. R. D. Banerji practically follows Bhagavanlal in his reading and rendering of the sentence. He rejects Fleet's interpretation for two reasons: (1) "The original has agasatikutariyaṁ and not agasatikutariyaṁ as supposed by Dr. Fleet . . . The u mark is very distinct at the right lower extremity of ta. This mark is not so very distinct at the end of the vertical line of ka but the chisel mark is plain enough."<sup>5</sup> But in Pl. IV, attached to Mr. Jayaswal's article, the u mark after t is not at all distinct, but looks more like a detached dot, and the u mark of the ku of Kumāra in line 14 is longer than the u mark of Mr. Banerji's kuturiya. The u mark of ka and ta is not recognised by Mr. Banerji's colleague, Mr. Jayaswal, who reads kaṁtariyaṁ. (2) Fleet objects to Bhagavanlal's rendering of vēcchinnṣ as vēcchinnṣ (vēcchinnānyāṁ) and recognises it as the Jain technical term vēcchinnṣ = vyavachchhinnāni applied to the sacred texts which have been "cut off, interrupted," or, in other terms, which have been neglected and lost sight of. Mr. Banerji writes, "The word vēcchinnṣ need not be taken in that technical sense in which it is used in modern Jain literature," and that as rāja-Muriya-kālṭ "shows that a date has been expressed in the same line," "the only possible translation of the word (vēcchinnṣ) is "expired," a meaning derived secondarily from its primary meaning "severed" or "cut" (p. 502). The correct Sanskrit rendering of the Prākṛit vēcchinnṣ (vēcchinnāna) is vyavachchhinnāna, the dictionary meanings of which are, "(1) cut off, rent asunder, torn off; (2) separated, divided; (3) particularised, specified; (4) marked, distinguished; (5) interrupted (Apte)." In a Jain text, the Kalparātra of Bhadrabāhu,<sup>6</sup> the word is thus used:—

(1) Nāyāṣ piṇḍabandhanṣ vēcchinnṣ (Jinācharitra, 127). Sanskrit commentary:—jñātāṣ t Mahā-vivāhayaṣ prēmabandhānaṣ vyavachchhinnṣ trujit, "having cut asunder the tie of friendship which he had for the son of the Jñātri clan."

(2) Vēcchinnāna-dhālā (Jinācharitra, 95) "A pregnant woman whose desires have been fulfilled."

(3) Asasatṭ ganaharā niravachchhāl vēcchinnāna (Sihavivāṇa, 2). "The rest of the Gaṇadharaṣ died leaving no descendants."

Such examples of the use of vachchhina as these do not warrant us in holding that vachhina (vyavachchhina) may also be used in the sense of a year being ended. In Indian epigraphic records gate or atta is used to denote the expired year, but vyavachchhina is nowhere else used in this sense. In the early Brāhmī and Khāroshthī inscriptions of Northern India the date is expressed by samvatsarā or sambatsarā, or briefly by sām or sa, and in the Brāhmī inscriptions of Western and Southern India by vast, varshā, samvachchharā or its variants, but never by any term like rājamuriya-kālā. The mention again of both the expired and the current years of the same era side by side is both unique and superfluous. Evidently to avoid this difficulty and to provide the verb upādāyati (upādāyati) with an object, Mr. Jayaswal proposes to read and translate the second part of the sentence as follows:—

chhā-yajhi Argasi ti kaṭṭariyam upādāyati

"The cave (kaṭari, kandara), of six poles, called the arkasi (Skt. arkasikā) is made."

But Plate IV attached to Mr. Jayaswal's article shows that the reading chhā-yajhi for chhāyajha is impossible. As regards the next word argasi, in a Prākṛit inscription the language of which is so much akin to Pali, conjunct rga is phonetically impossible, and the mark on the left side of ga in Mr. Jayaswal's Plate cannot be mistaken for the superscript r. The i-mark of sa also is not visible in the facsimile, and Bhagavanlal and Banerji failed to notice it on the rock.

The reading of the first part of the sentence is even more uncertain. The word between panatariya and raja-Muriya-kālā is enigmatical. In the facsimile the letter after sa looks rather like cha or chā and the next letter is evidently ta and not va, for the lower part of it consists of a semi-circle opening below instead of a circle. The three letters that follow ta look like satata. But whatever may be the correct reading or meaning of sachi (cha) ta sa ta to, no date can be denoted by this group of letters.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. V. A. Smith works out the date of Khāravelā in a different way. In line 6 of the Hāthigumphā inscription occurs this sentence:—

ā(ghā)ṭam Tanandiyasāḍā panāḍim nagaram ?

Dr. Lüders translates this sentence thus:—"In the fifth year he had an aqueduct (panāḍi) that had not been used for 103 years since king (rājan) Nāmā (or since the Nāmā Kings ?) conducted into the city." Mr. V. A. Smith writes, "If we assume 322 B.C. as the end of the Nāmā dynasty, the fifth year of Khāravelā would be 103 years later, namely 219 B.C. and his accession should be placed about 223 B.C."* But the wide difference in form between the alphabet of the edicts of Aśoka on the one hand and that of the Hāthigumphā inscription on the other, already noted by Bhagavanlal, renders this estimate of Khāravelā's date quite untenable. The most notable characteristics of the Hāthigumphā alphabet are:—(1) A considerable number of letters with thick-headed vertical or serif; (2) ka with the lower part of the vertical prolonged; (3) invariably rounded ga; (4) chha of the butterfly type with two loops; (5) ta's having in most cases rounded lower part. These characteristics that the Hâthigumphâ inscription shares, to a considerable extent, with the inscriptions on the Sâñchi gateways, indicate that this epigraph is later in date not only than Aśoka's edicts and the Bannagar Garuḍa pillar inscriptions, but also later than the Bharhut īśvara inscription, and the Nānāghāt inscriptions of the time of the Andhra King Siri Sātakaṇi I. Therefore Sātakaṇi mentioned in the Hâthigumphâ inscription, without taking heed of whom Khāravela sent a large army to the west in the second year of his reign, should also be identified with Sātakaṇi II whose reign may be tentatively dated between 75-20 A.C. The rise of Sātakaṇi II and Khāravela probably synchronised with the fall of the Śuṅga dynasty and the consequent weakening of the power of Magadha. Sātakaṇi II evidently claimed some sort of suzerainty over the states that lay to the west of Kāliṅga and consequently Khāravela's expeditions to the west involved defiance of the Andhra power. Khāravela probably never again did so after the second year of his reign. His later expeditions were led to the north. In the eighth year Khāravela raided Magadha and compelled the king of Rājagaha (Rājagriha) to retire to Mathurā. In the twelfth year he again invaded Magadha and made the Magadha king bow at his feet.

<sup>1</sup> Since the above was in type Mr. Jayaswal has published in JBORS, Vol. IV, Part IV, a second article entitled Hāthigumphā Inscription revised from the Rock (pp. 364-403), wherein in place of thaṃbhe patiḥāpayati [i] Pān-aṃtariya-sāḥi-vasa sate Rāja Muriya-Kālā vachhine chhāyathā Argasi ti Kaṭṭariyam upādāyati in line 16, he now proposes to read, thaṃbhe patiḥāpayati [i] panatariya sata-sahasahi [i] Muriya Kālā vachhinaṃ (nēṃ) cha choyajhi-agnatikuṃtariyam upādāyati [i] (p. 402). (a) The substitution of sata-sahasahi for sachi-vasa-sate-Rāja shows that the old reading is very doubtful. But it is also difficult to accept Mr. Jayaswal's new reading, particularly he instead of rāja, as against the impressions published by himself with his first article and against the reading of Bhagavanlal and Mr. R. D. Banerji both of whom examined the rock. The elimination of the term rāja renders the acceptance of this solitary instance of Muriya-Kālā as a royal era still more difficult. (b) Mr. Jayaswal's rendering of the expression beginning with Muriya-Kālā is also open to objection. He translates it, "He (the king) completes the Muriya time (era), counted, and being of an interval of sixty-four with a century" (p. 395). The rendering of vachhine as "counted" is even more far-fetched than "expired". The particle cha after vachhine makes it difficult to read it as vachhinaṃ qualifying the substantive Muriya-Kālāṃ. Even if we overlook vachhine, the passage appears to be a very unusual way of stating a date. Still more unusual is the statement of a date as an independent achievement in a prastāvi, for this is how Mr. Jayaswal takes it to be by treating Muriya Kālāṃ as accusative to upādāyati. The root di from which Mr. Jayaswal proposes to derive upādāyati means 'to perish, die, waste, decay, diminish (Apte)'. So the rendering of upādāyati as 'completes' is also very far-fetched. What, again, is the significance of, "He (Khāravelā) completes the Muriya time (era)" ? Khāravelā was not a Muriya (Maurya) but a Cheta (a name not unknown to literature, as Cheta princes are mentioned in the Vessantara Jātaka), and it is not clear how a king of one line could complete the era of another.

One grave objection to this calculation of the date of Khāravela based on palaeographic considerations is ti-vasa-sata in the clause Nandārāja ti-vasasata śīṭita. Bhagavanlal reads it as ti-vasasata and Mr. Jayaswal as ti-vasa-sata (300) and evidently Dr. Lüders also does the same and translates it as "103 years". Stems sata (hundred) and sahasā (1,000) take plural suffixes in the edicts of Aśoka as well as in the Hâthigumphâ inscription when denoting plurality of hundreds or thousands. In the Rock Edict I we have vahni pānasatasahasāni, "many hundred thousand animals"; in the Rock Edict IV, vahni vasasatāni, "many hundreds of years".

L. 4. panatisāhi satasahasāthi, "by 3,500,000."

L. 7. anāhāni satasahasāni, "many hundreds of thousands."

L. 10. afhatisa satasahasāthi, "by 3,800,000."

If the reading is ti-vasa-sata, it must denote 103 and not 300. But, as the facsimile shows, there is no anuvāra sign either above or beside the final ta of ti-vasasata. The absence of vibhakti (suffix) after ti-vasasata is due to the fact that it forms part of a compound word, Nandārāja-ti-vasasata-o (ghāṭ) śa qualifying panāṇi (aqueduct). An objection that may be made to such a construction is that ti-vasasata and oghāṭita are not combined according to the rule of Sandhi. But this is not the only instance in which the writer of this epigraph has ignored the rules of Sandhi in writing a compound word. In the first line we have chaturastala-ṭhuna-guṇa-up(ś)ṭhena. Bhagavanlal and Jayaswal read gun-opagathena. But in the facsimile the letter after gu looks more like ya than no, and the two letters after na are upa and not paga. So here ya and u have not been combined. The non-elision of a of guṇa and sata may be due to the fact that in both cases it is followed by verbs beginning with a vowel. Ti-vasasata as a part of the compound may mean either 300 or 103 years. If we take it in the sense of "300 years," the whole compound denoting, "made by king Nanda 300 years before," the historical evidence contained herein agrees well with the indications of palaeography. Mr. Banerji proposes to identify this Nandārāja with Nandivardhana, the ninth king of the Śiṣunāga dynasty. There is nothing in the Purāṇas, our only sources of information for Nandivardhana, that he ever had anything to do with Kāliṅga. On the contrary we are distinctly told in the Purāṇas that when the kings of the Śiṣunāga dynasty and their predecessors were reigning in Magadha, 32 Kāliṅgas, that is to say, 32 kings, reigned in Kāliṅga in succession synchronously. It is not Nandivardhana but Mahāpadma Nanda, son of Nandivardhana's son Mahanandin by a Śūdra woman, who is said to have brought "all under his sole sway" and "uprooted all Kshatriyas" or the old reigning families. So we should identify Nandārāja of the Hâthigumphâ inscription who held possession of Kāliṅga either with the all-conquering Mahāpadma Nanda or one of his sons. According to the Purāṇas Mahāpadma Nanda lived or reigned for 88 years and his 8 sons in all reigned 12 years.<sup>10</sup> A total reign of 12 years for eight sons indicates confusion. So it appears more reasonable to identify the Nandārāja of the Hâthigumphâ inscription with Mahāpadma Nanda than with any of his sons. The last Nanda was overthrown by Chandragupta the Maurya in about 321 B.C. Assuming that Mahāpadma Nanda reigned for 50 years—not an inordinately long period for a monarch who reduced all the ancient kingdoms of Northern India to subjection,—we have 321+12+50=383 B.C. as the year of his accession; and further, assuming that the author of the Hâthigumphâ inscription, in putting down "300 years" as the interval between Nanda's rule in Kāliṅga and the fifth year of Khāravela has used a round number, we may put down the accession of Khāravela to about 70 B.C. and that of Sātakaṇi II a few years earlier.

CRUISE OF THE PIRATE GOOD HOPE, 1687.

Amongst the Buccaneers who sailed for the Philippines was one John Eaton. According to James Burney (Chronological History of the Discoveries in the South Seas) he behaved very cruelly to the inhabitants of the Ladrone Islands and took much plunder on the Chinese Coast, but what became of him afterwards I do not know. Probably he died in those parts, for some of his crew managed to get to the Bay of Bengal without him, and arrived at the mouth of the Hûgli. There they found the East India Company's ketch Good Hope and, persuading the Mate, Duncan Mackintosh, and some of the crew to join them, carried her off, Mackintosh being elected Captain. Apparently they made good booty after putting the narrator of the cruise ashore, for, from India Office Records, O.C. 5690,<sup>87</sup> it appears that the Good Hope arrived at St. Augustine's in Madagascar with a good store of gold and diamonds but very few men, in May 1689. The cowardice displayed by this gang of pirates in their affrays with the Malays and Japanese was probably due to the smallness of their crew, for it was a maxim of the pirates never to take any unnecessary risks.

"The Right Honble. Company's Ketch Good Hope arrived in Ballasore Road, Samuëll Herron Commander, brought two Pylotts to carry up the Rochester and the Rebecka to Hugli [Hûgli]: and May the 2nd was by Sunrising surpriz'd and taken by some of Captain Eaton's men having first bound the Master and myself in the Great Cabbin, and the rest of the men readily assenting to goe and seek their fortunes with them, one George Robinson only excepted. They then cutt the Cable in the hause, made saile for the Nincombarrs [Nicobars], before which it was put to the vote whether they should putt the Master and myself on shoare upon the Andimans Islands inhabited by man-Eaters.<sup>88</sup> At the Nincombarrs they wooded and water'd their Ketch, then proceeding on their Pyratting desaigne for the Straights of Mallacca. Off [f] Acheen they took a small Prow bound to the Port, wherein they put the Master, but would not lett me goe with him. One George Robinson aforesaid went into the boat, thinking to leave them, but was hal'd in by the hair of his head and threatned to be murder'd.

"In the sight of Mallacca they came up with a China Junk who had two Portugeuze Pylotts on board, one of which with a China Merchant came on board to shew a Dutch pass he had. They detain'd them, mann'd the Junk's boat with their own Rogues, went on board, took her without firing gunn, great or small, plunder'd her, found noe money in her, shee being laden with Sandalla wood and not answering their expectations, tooke out a chest of silke, some cloaths, then cutt holes in her and sunk her. The two aforesaid Portugeuze Pylotts inform'd them that there was a Portugeuze shipp gon before, and that if they made the best of their way they might come up with her, which fell out accordingly, for in the Straights of Pincomporas [? Sincompora, Singapore] they took her under the King of England's Colours, firing at her three guns. At the first they struck their topgallant sailes, the next their topsailes, and the third and last halled up all, and the Commander with some merchants or gentlemen came on board, who were detain'd as the Chinee had bin before; manning the boat with themselves went on board the shipp, turn'd the major part of the people into the boat, sent her on board the Ketch. As soon as she came, the rest with the Chinee prisoners were put into the boat and turn'd away, first giving them a bag of rice, some pieces of beef with a Totch<sup>59</sup> to boyle it in, carried the shipp to Pulo Ladure [? Pulo da Ore=Pulo Awar], where, after they had taken out the plate and jewells and sufficiently plunder'd her, they burn'd her and ran away by the light, from whence they went to Pulo Condore to waite the comming of the ships from the Moneilas [Manila], also two great Junks that yearly goe to Japan, where they remain'd untill the time of the year serv'd for the comming of shipping from China, Japan and Moneilas, then went out a-cruizing to windward, having first made the Ketch a Pink by putting another mast into her.

"Riding at the southermost part of the Island they see a shipp, gave her chase, came up with her, fir'd at her without hailing her, who fought them stoutly, killing them one man. The sea was so great they could not board, was forst to lett her goe: after that, below Pulu Ubi they saw a Malaisa Prow, mann'd their boat in order to take her. When they came under her sterne commanded them on board the Ketch. The Malaisa answer'd the Sun was setting. In the morning they would come, which occasion'd one Richard Webb to fire his Fuzee into the Prow, who return'd a volly that kill'd two men and wounded three, so the Piratts turn'd taile. As soon as the Malaisa saw it, they nimbly stepd into their owne boate and persued them untill they were within gunn shott of the Ketch.

"Some time after, to the windward of the Island they gave chase to a Japan Junk, who finding they could not get clear of the Rogues, boare downe upon them and had run them under water had they not imediatly lett flie the maine sheet. Nere a Rogue of them dare to thro' a Granada into her, but follow'd her from the Island Pulo Condore to Pulu [? Tanjang], where they left her, and while anchor'd there saw another Japan Junk, as was by them suppos'd, gave her chase, could not come up with her, fearing they should fall so deep into the Bay of Syam that they could not turne it up again, left of their chase, turn'd up to Pulu [? Tanjang] and Condore againe, of [?] where they cruiz'd a considerable time.

"Provisions growing scarce, they went to some Islands near the Coast of Borneo, at last came to an Island colled Tymbolan,<sup>60</sup> which is a dayes saile of Suckadana,<sup>61</sup> where Eaton had bin before. There I laid a designe to cutt them off, perswaded seven or eight soldiers &c. to assent to the conspiracy. That night it was to be put in execution the Carpenter, a Dutchman, one as deeply engaged by oath as anyone in that enterprize, discover'd it; therefore they putt me on shoare, and as many as was willing to goe with me upon an uninhabited Island, four miles distant. About Sunsett it prov'd much thunder, lightning and rain. Wee had nothing to shelter us but the heavenly Canope, from which dropped much moisture. In the morning they sent their canoe to fetch us or board again with whom wee would not goe. Therefore they weighed their anchors and away they went. Wee made it our business to gett up to Tymbolan by wading upon the corally Rocks, sometimes up to the knees, then at once to the neck in water, bare foot and bare legged. At last by Divine Providence came a Fishing boat that call'd unto us and took us in, carried us unto the said Island, where wee continued six weeks, was kindly used by the inhabitants before wee could get to Roe [? Rhio] in the Straights of Mallacca, where wee continued six months before wee could find an opportunity of going thither [? further], by reason they were embroyled in warr with the Dutch and all their neighbouring Princes, from whence they fled to Johore and wee with them.

"A Cessation of Armes hapening, a Dutch sloop came there, upon whom three of us embark'd for Mallacca, where at Johore was left three of our Company whome wee suspected would turn Mallais or Mussullmen, viz., Thomas Steele, Matthew Curtis, Antony Budart. Ourselves arriv'd safe at Mallacca, viz., H. Watson, George Robinson, Francis Cooke, where found the Pearle Friggatt, Captain [James] Peryman Commander, and Mr. [John] Hill,<sup>62</sup> who had bin Ambassadors to Syam, with whome we went to Fort St. George, where wee, the three last nam'd, gave in our Narrative upon oath to the Honble. Governour [Elihu Yale] and Sir John Bigs &c."<sup>63</sup>

PIRATE BASE AT ST. MARY'S, MADAGASCAR, 1690-1698.

It has been mentioned that Mackintosh took his ship to St. Augustine's in Madagascar. That island had already become a base for European interlopers and pirates who intended to cruise in the Red Sea or Indian Ocean. Madagascar and the islands round its shores were admirably suited for this purpose, but the ports which were chiefly frequented by the pirates were Port St. Augustine (St. Augustine's Bay), Port or Fort Dolphin (Dauphin) and the Island of St. Mary. As these pirates were chiefly equipped in New

St. George in 1687 and arrived at Madras 22 July 1687. (Love's Vestiges of Old Madras, I, 493.)

England and the West Indies, some of the merchants who sent them out hit upon the idea of sending ships to Madagascar with provisions, stores, arms and wine, which they sold to the pirates, who, fresh from their raids, were ready to pay any price that might be asked. One of these merchants was Frederick Phillips of New York, who employed as his Agent a retired pirate Adam Baldrige. The latter, having killed a man in Jamaica, found it convenient to absent himself from home until the recollection of his misdeed had somewhat faded. After an absence of nearly ten years he returned to New York and was persuaded by Lord Bellamont to make the following deposition. Interesting as it is, giving us many dates which, without it, would be difficult to ascertain, it seems a pity that he was not in a position to speak more freely.

It is noticeable that he calls the pirates privateers, a name which they preferred, and in fact, many of the pirate ships sailed under commissions granted them by different Colonial Governors. It was a slight matter that these commissions were intended to serve against the French. If the Captains who held them were too particular, their crews deposed them.

Amongst the articles for sale to pirates, are mentioned both Bibles and Prayer Books. One might imagine that pirates had no use for such things, but it is a fact that a considerable number amongst them were pressed men, or men, often officers, who, having lost their all when their ships were taken by pirates, had in desperation become pirates themselves. At times such men, horrified at the villainous acts to which they found themselves committed, were stricken with remorse and, remembering the teachings of pious parents, were eager for the consolations of religion. One does not know whether to be disgusted at or to admire the business acumen which made Phillips and his like remember to cater for the requirements of these poor wretches.

Deposition of Captain Adam Baldrige.

(1) July 17th 1690.—I Adam Baldrige arrived at the Island of St. Mary's in the ship Fortune, Richard Conyers Commander, on the 7th of January 1690/91. I left the ship, being minded to settle among the negroes at St. Mary's with two men more, but the ship went to Port Dolphin and was cast away April 15th 1691, and half the men drowned and half saved their lives and got ashore, but I continued with the negroes at St. Mary's and went to war with [i.e., in alliance with] them. Before my going to war, one of the men died that went ashore with me and the other being discouraged, went on board again, and none continued with me but my prentice George King. March the 9th they sailed for Bonnovolo on Madagascar sixteen leagues from St. Mary's, where they stopt to take on rice. After I went to war six men more left the ship, whereof two of them died about three weeks after they went ashore and the rest died since. In May 1691 I returned from war and brought seventy head of cattle and some slaves. Then I had a house built and settled upon St. Mary's, where great stores of negroes resorted to me from the Island Madagascar and settled the Island St. Mary's, where I lived quietly with them, helping them to redeem their wives and children that were taken, before my coming to St. Mary's, by other negroes to the north of us about sixty leagues.

(2) October 13th 1691.—Arrived the Bachelor's Delight, Capt. George Raynor Commander, burden 180 tons or thereabouts, 14 guns, 70 or 80 men, that had made a voyage into the Red Sea and taken a ship belonging to the Moors, as the men did report, where they took as much money as made the whole share [of the] men about 1,100 lbs. a man. They careened at St. Mary's, and while they careened I supplied them with cattle for their present spending and they gave me for my cattle a quantity of beads, five great guns for a fortification, some powder and shot and six barrels of flour, about seventy bars of iron. The ship belonged to Jamaica and set sail from St. Mary's November 4th 1691, bound for Port Dolphin on Madagascar to take in their provision, and December 1691 they set sail from Port Dolphin bound for America, where I have heard since they arrived at Carolina and complied [compounded] with the owners, giving them for ruin of their ship three thousand pounds as I have heard since.

(3) October 14th 1692.—Arrived the Nassau, Capt. Edward Coats Commander, burden 170 tons or thereabouts, 6 guns, 70 men, whereof about 30 of the men stayed at Madagascar, being most of them concerned in taking the Hackboat at the Isle of May [Maio, Cape de Verde Is.] Coll. Thrympton owner. The said Hackboat was lost at St. Augustin. Capt. Coats careened at St. Mary's, and whilst careening I supplied them with cattle for their present spending, and the negroes with fowls, rice and yams, and for the cattle I had two chests and one jar of powder, six great guns and a quantity of great shot, some spikes and nails, five bolts of Duck [rolls of linen cloth] and some twine, a hogshead of flour. The ship most of her belonged to the Company as they [i.e., the crew] said. Capt. Coats set sail from St. Mary's in November 1692 bound for Port Dolphin on Madagascar and victualled there and in December set sail for New York. Capt. Coats made about 500 lb. a man in the Red Sea.

(4) August 7th 1693.—Arrived the ship Charles, John Churcher Master, from New York. Mr. Frederick Phillips, owner, sent to bring me several sorts of goods. She had two cargoes in her, one consigned to said Master to dispose of and one to me containing as follows:—4 pairs of shoes and pumps, 6 dozen of worsted and thread stockings, 3 dozen of speckled shirts and breeches, 12 hats, some carpenter's tools, 5 barrels of rum, 4 quarter casks of Madeira wine, 10 cases of spirits, 2 old stills full of holes, one worm, 2 grindstones, 2 cross-saws and 1 whipsaw, 3 jars of oil, 2 small iron pots, 3 barrels of cannon powder, some books, catechisms, primers and hornbooks, 2 Bibles and some garden seeds, 3 dozen of hens [?]; and I returned for the said goods [1100 pieces of eight and dollars, 34 slaves, 15 head of cattle, 57 bars of iron. October the 5th he set sail from St. Mary's after having sold part of his cargo to the Whitemen upon Madagascar to Manratan<sup>64</sup> to take in slaves.

(5) October 19th 1693.—Arrived the ship Amity, Capt. Thos. Tew Commander, burden 70 tons, 8 guns, 60 men, having taken a ship in the Red Sea that did belong to the Moors [Muhammadans] as the men did report. They took much money in her and made the whole share men [about] 1200 lb. a man. They careened at St. Mary's and had some cattle from me, but for their victuals and sea-stores they bought from the negroes. I sold Capt. Tew and his Company some of the goods brought in the Charles from New York. The ship belonged most of her to Bermuda. Capt. Tew set sail from St. Mary's December 23rd 1693 bound for America.

(6) August 9th 1695.—Arrived the Charming Mary from Barbadoes, Capt. Richard Glover Commander, Mr. John Beckford Merchant and part owner. The most of the ship belonged to Barbadoes, Colonel Russell, Judge Coats and the Nigames [?]. She was burden about 200 tons, 16 guns, 80 men. She had several sorts of goods on board. I bought most or them. She careened at St. Mary's and in October she set sail from St. Mary's for Madagascar to take in rice and slaves.

(7) August 1695.—Arrived the ship Katherine from New York, Capt. Thos. Mostyn Commander and Supercargo, Mr. Fred. Phillips owner, the ship burden about 160 tons, no guns, near 80 [? 20] men. She had several sorts of goods in her. She sold the most to the Whitemen upon Madagascar where she had careened. He set sail from St. Mary's for Madraton [? Mandritsara] on Madagascar to take in his rice and slaves.

(8) December 7th 1695.—Arrived the ship Susanna, Capt. Thos. Week Commander, burden about 100 tons, 10 guns, 70 men. They fitted out from Boston and Rhode Island and had been in the Red Seas, but made no voyage, by reason they missed the Moors fleet. They careened at St. Mary's and I sold them part of the goods bought of Mr. John Beckford out of the Charming Mary and spared them some cattle, but for the most part they were supplied by the negroes. They stayed at St. Mary's till the middle of April, where the Captain and Master and most of the men died. The rest of the men that were left after the sickness carried the ship to St. Augustin, where they left her and went in Capt. Hore's for the Red Sea.

(9) December 11th 1695.—Arrived the ship Amity having no Captain, her former Captain, Thomas Tew, being killed by a great shot from a Moors ship, John Yarland Master, burden 70 tons, 8 guns as before described, and about 60 men. They stayed but few days at St. Mary's and set sail to seek the Charming Mary and they met her at Mauratan on Madagascar and took her, giving Capt. Glover the sloop to carry him and his men home and all that he had, keeping nothing but the ship. They made a new Commander after they had taken the ship, one Captain Bobbington. After they had made the ship they went into St. Augustin's Bay and fitted the ship and went into the Indies to make a voyage and I have heard since that they were trepanned and taken by the Moors.

(10) December 29th 1695.—Arrived a Moors ship taken by the Resolution and given to Capt. Robert Glover and 24 of his men that was not willing to go a-privateering upon the coasts of India, to carry him away. The Company turned Captain Glover and these 24 men out of the ship, Captain Glover being part owner and Commander of the same and confined prisoner by her Company upon the Coast of Guinea by reason he would not consent to go about the Cape of Good Hope into the Red Sea, the ship very old and would hardly swim with them to St. Mary's. When they arrived there they applied themselves to me and I maintained them in my house with provision till June that shipping arrived for to carry them home.

(11) January 17th 1696-7.—Arrived the brigantine Amity that was Captain Tew's sloop, from Barbadoes and fitted into a brigantine by the owners of the Charming Mary at Barbadoes, Captain Richard Glover Commander and Supercargo. The brigantine described when [? as] a sloop. She was laden with several sorts of goods, part whereof I bought and part sold to the Whitemen upon Madagascar and part to Captain Hore and his Company. The brigantine taken afterwards by the Resolution at St. Mary's.

(12) February 13th 1696-7.—Arrived Captain John Hore's prize from the Gulf of Persia and three or four days after arrived Captain John Hore in the John and Rebecca, burden about 180 tons, 20 guns, 100 men in ship and prize. The prize about 300 tons, laden with calicos. I sold some of the goods bought of Glover to Captain Hore and his Company as likewise [to] the Whitemen that lived upon Madagascar and Captain Richard Glover.

(13) June 9th 1697.—Arrived the Resolution Captain Chivers Commander, burden near 200 tons, 90 men, 20 guns. Formerly the ship belonged to Captain Robert Glover, but the Company took her from him and turned him and 24 men of his men out of her by reason they were not willing to go a-privateering into the East Indies. They met with a Mosoune<sup>65</sup> at sea and lost all their masts and put into Madagascar about ten leagues to the northward of St. Mary's, and there masted and fitted their ship; and while they lay there, they took the brigantine Amity for her water-casks, sails and rigging and masts, and turned the hull a-drift upon a reef. Captain Glover promised to forgive them what was past if they would let him have his ship again and go home to America, but they would not except he would go into the East Indies with them. September 25 they set sail to the Indies.

(14) June 14th 1697.—Arrived the ship Fortune from New York, Captain Thomas Mostyn Commander and Robert Allison Supercargo, the ship burden 150 tons or thereabouts, 8 guns, near 20 men, having several sorts of goods aboard and sold to Captain Hore and Company and to the Whitemen upon Madagascar.

(15) June 1st 1697.—Arrived a ship from New York, Captain Cornelius Jacobs Commander and Supercargo, Mr. Fred. Phillips owner, burden about 150 tons, 2 guns, near 20 men, having several sorts of goods aboard and sold to Captain Hore and his Company and to the Whitemen upon Madagascar and 4 barrels of tar to me.

(16) July 1st 1697.—Arrived the brigantine Swift from Boston, Mr. Andrew Knott Master and John Johnson Merchant and part owner, burden about 40 tons, 2 guns, 10 men, having several sorts of goods aboard, some sold to Captain Hore and Company; the rest put ashore at St. Mary's and left there. A small time after his arrival I bought three quarters of her and careened and went out to seek a trade and to settle a foreign commerce and trade in several places on Madagascar. About eight or ten days after I went from St. Mary's the negroes killed about 30 Whitemen upon Madagascar and St. Mary's and took all they or I had. Captain Mostyn and Captain Jacobs and Captain Hore's ship and Company being all there at the same time and set sail from St. Mary's October 1697 for Madagascar to take in their slaves and rice having made a firm commerce with the negroes on Madagascar. At my return I met with Captain Mostyn at sea sixty leagues of St. Mary's. He acquainted me with the negroes' rising and killing the Whitemen. He persuaded me to return back with him and not proceed any further for there was no safe going to St. Mary's, all my men being sick. After good consideration we agreed to return and go for America.

The above mentioned men that were killed by the natives were most of them privateers that had been in the Red Sea and took several ships there. They were chiefly the reason of the natives rising, by their abusing of the natives and taking their cattle from them, and were most of them to the best of my knowledge men that came in several ships as Captain Raynor, Captain Coats, Captain Tew, Captain Hore and the Resolution and Captain Chivers.

THE CRUISE OF HENRY EVERY, 1693-6.

Henry Every (Avery or Avory) alias Bridgman, was the most famous pirate of his day. Mate of the ship Charles (Captain Gibson) which had been hired with other ships by the Spanish Government, through Sir James Houblon, to assist in the protection of the Spanish American colonies, he persuaded a part of the crew to mutiny at Corunna<sup>66</sup> in May 1694 and took possession of the ship. Renaming her the Fancy, he carried her first to the West Indies, where he completed his crew, and then via Madagascar to the Red Sea. He attempted to fix a base at Perim, but, finding no water, proceeded to St. Mary's in Madagascar, where he built a kind of fort and established friendly relations with the natives, though the stories of his ruling like a king amongst them are probably wild exaggerations, for his total stay in the Indian seas cannot have been longer than some eighteen months.

In 1695 he captured the Gunswey, a rich pilgrim ship, on board of which there were many Indian ladies of distinction, who appear to have been very shamefully treated. He is said to have married one of them, a royal Princess, and to have had by her a son who was living in Madagascar in 1720, though the poor lady herself speedily died. The booty taken on this occasion was enormous—it is said to have been more than £200,000! At any rate Every and his crew were now satisfied to go out of business. In April 1696 they arrived at the Island of Providence, in the Bahamas, where they were well received by the Governor, Nicholas Trott. Having divided their booty, they scattered, and a number of them made for England. There some were identified, tried and executed, but Every escaped detection and having been cheated of his booty by the men whom he employed to turn it into cash, died in great poverty at Bideford in the year 1727.

As Every impudently claimed the right to use Captain Gibson's commission, he flew St. George's flag, using the red flag only when his victims persisted in resistance. Apparently he never, in the Indian Seas, attacked his own countrymen or, in fact, any but Indian vessels. He is said to have carried the Mughal flag taken on the Gunswey to America, where it was flown by the pirate Captain John James of the Providence Galley in 1699. Probably James was a former member of his crew.

The damage done to trade by Every and other pirates with whom he associated was so great that it caused a serious quarrel between the Agents of the East India Company and the Mughal Government, the latter holding them responsible for the misdoings of their countrymen. This made it necessary for the English Government to come to the assistance of the Company, which was unable by itself to free the seas from these dangerous pests.

Narrative of Philip Middleton, a youth belonging to the ship "Charles," alias "Fancy," which was delivered to the Lords Justices, the 4th August 1696.

"The ship Charles, Henry Every [Commander], first plundered three English vessels at the Isle of May of provisions only, and nine of their men went on board the said Charles, most West Countrymen, vizt. James Gray, Thomas Summerton, Edward Kerwood, William Downe, John Redy, &c.

"Thence to the Coast of Guinea, where took two Danes,<sup>67</sup> out of which they had a quantity of elephants teeth and divided about eight or nine ounces of gold a man. Fourteen of the Danish crew came aboard them.

"Thence they sailed to Madagascar and to Johanna, where twelve French pirates came aboard them and afterwards took a French pirating junk with about forty men, who had good booty with them. They also joined them, being in all about 170 men, with 14 Danes, 52 French and 104 English.

"From Johanna they sailed into the Red Sea<sup>68</sup> and got intelligence of two rich ships that were at Mocha bound for Surat, but they passed them in the night, of which they had notice by a small junk they took the next day and made after them. They came up with the smaller first, who made little or no resistance. The same day they took the great ship who fought for about two hours and many of their men were killed, being about 1,300 persons aboard and on the other ship about 700. They kept both ships in their possession two days and all the Charles's men, except Every, boarded them by turns, taking out of the said ships only provisions and other necessities besides treasure, which was very great, though little in comparison to what was on board, for, though they put several to the torture, they would not confess where the rest of their treasure lay. They took great quantities of jewels and a saddle and bridle set with rubies, designed for a present for the Great Mogul. The men lay with the Indian women aboard those ships, and there were several of them by their habits and riches in jewels appeared of better quality than the rest. The great ship was called the Gonnoway.

"After they had taken these prizes they went to Rajapore to water and so to

"Thence they sailed to Ascension, where they turned fifty turtle and found letters of two English ships having been there. This was in March last, and the latter end of April they arrived at Providence, having but two days provisions left.

"They made a present to the Governor there, whose name is [Nicholas] Trott, of twenty pieces of eight a man, besides two chequins<sup>70</sup> of gold, upon which he permitted them to come ashore, and gave them a treat at his house, at which one of the men breaking a drinking glass, he made him pay for it eight chequins.

"The men presented the Governor also with the ship and all on board her, being some quantity of elephants teeth left in her. Colonel Richard Talliaferro, Deputy Governor, was a sharer with Trott in the booty.

"Every had changed his name to Bridgman, went on shore at Providence and about eighty men, which dispersed themselves to several ports and bought sloops there.

"One called the Seaflower, Captain Ferro, bought of Crosskeys and Flavell, in which embarkt Every and nineteen other men, viz. Jno. Down, John——, Nat. Pike, Peter Soames, Hen. Adams, Francis——, Thos. Johnson, Joseph Dawson, Samuel Dawson, James Lewis, James Hammond and Roy, John Sparks, Joseph Goss, Charles Faulkner, Thomas Somerton, James Murrey.

"These landed about a month since at Dunfanahan, twenty miles northward of Lough Swilly, by Londonderry, and thence by land to Dublin. Every took shipping for England at Carrickfergus. Captain Ferro remained at Londonderry with his sloop, which the seamen gave him for a present.

"Another sloop, which one Hollingsworth commanded, was chased into Dublin by a French privateer, on board of which were sixteen more of the Charles's men, viz. Robert Richy, John Miller, John King, Edward Savill, William Phillips, Thomas Joye. These were most Scotchmen and bound thither.

"William May went to Pensilvania.

"Several went to New England.

"Two of the men had been at Jamaica and returned back to Providence.

"Edward Short killed by a shirk [shark].

"Thomas Bolitha met at Dublin, but he came over in some other sloop, for he was not on board either of the two before mentioned.

"Trott took several guns out of the ship, which had 48 mounted, to plant on a platform to secure the Island from the French."

<sup>69</sup> Supposing all shared alike this, for 170 men, would make a total of £164,900. Probably the booty amounted to over £200,000.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF MALAYAN HISTORY.

By SIR RICHARD TEMPLE.

[I have had reason on several occasions lately to examine the history of the Malays and have found myself hampered in my studies by the want of any short abstract thereof in English, which could keep a general view of the whole subject before my mind, and serve to help me to conceive its many and necessarily confusing details in something like a practical sequence and in a true proportion to each other. I therefore compiled for my own use a brief sketch of the history of the Archipelago and Peninsula, for which combination the best general name I have yet come across in the literature of the subject is Malaysia. As it may be of use to others, I now print it, without laying any claim to having made it an authoritative or complete document.]

South of Indo-China lies the Malay Archipelago, the most important collection of islands in the world. They are sharply divided geographically between those rising out of deep and shallow water by what is usually called Wallace's Line, being thus in two divisions: the Western or Asiatic in the shallow sea which impinges on the great spit of land jutting out southwards from Indo-China, known as the Malay Peninsula, and the Eastern and Melanesian, which approaches Australia. As in the case of Indo-China itself, the aborigines of the whole area of Malaysia were Negritos, who at some remote period were overlain by a kindred race, the Melanesians, and in much later times, in part, by the Malays, the people with whom we now have to do. The Malays have been generally (and to my mind correctly) looked upon as one of the Indo-Chinese races, but of late they have been by some recognised as a people apart, allied to the Polynesians of the Pacific Ocean further to the East, their immigration into the Archipelago being northwards towards the Asiatic Continent and not southwards away from it. The term "Malay" for the race is from the native name Malayu, which is traceable as far back as A.D. 671, when the Chinese traveller I Tsing reported on them as the Moloyu, though he actually meant by the expression the people of the Hindu Menangkabau kingdom of Sumatra.

The recorded history of the islands is quite recent, except where ancient Indian, Arabian and European trade penetrated. That is to say, except in Java, Sumatra and allied islands, and in the Malay Peninsula, history may be said to commence with the advent of modern European traders in search of spices, just as their ancient forerunners had gone there for pepper and cloves. In Java and Sumatra, ancient Indian Hindu and Buddhist kingdoms were set up, leaving some splendid monuments behind them, to become by the fourteenth century converts to Islam, owing to the proselytising tendencies of Arab and other Muhammadan traders. Nowadays the whole land of the Malays, where not still occupied by primitive animists, may be said to be Muhammadan: that is, the people profess Islam, while they are at heart animists. The quality of the spices that these regions produce in great abundance has throughout historical times been an irresistible attraction to all maritime nations, and has led the Portuguese, the Spaniards, the Dutch and the English to battle for the trade. Indeed, it was the high price of pepper in England, created by a Dutch "corner" in that article of commerce at the end of the sixteenth century, that led to the formation of the first English East India Company in 1600, and thus indirectly to the foundation of the British Empire in India.

Except through tradition, as recorded in the native chronicles of Java and Sumatra and to a less extent elsewhere, and through some inscriptions, the only general knowledge that exists regarding the Malays before the advent of the Portuguese in 1508 is that contained in the notes of travellers and geographical writers. Thus, Megasthenes (Greek) writing in India (306-298 B.C.), Pomponius Mela (Roman A.D. 43) and Josephus (Jew, c. 85) knew of the existence of the spice regions, and roughly, their position. About 79, Hippalus, the navigator, demonstrated the use of the trade winds, now known as the " Monsoons," which materially altered the capacity for Western discovery. So by the days of Ptolemy, the Alexandrian astronomer-geographer (127-151), knowledge of the Archipelago came to be recorded at first hand, and exploration became possible, bringing about the voyage of the envoys of Marcus Aurelius to Tongking in 166, and later the journeys and records of Cosmas Indicopleustes of Alexandria (c. 530-548). Chinese monkish (Buddhist) travellers also appeared on the scene: Fa Hian in Java (412-414), who found Hinduism flourishing and Buddhism commencing to have influence, and I Tsing in Sumatra in 671 and 688, who first noted the Malays by name. Thereafter the great medieval travellers, Marco Polo (Venetian), Odoric of Pordenone (Italian), and Ibn Batuta of Tangier, are found in Java and Sumatra, respectively in 1293, 1325 and 1345. Others, such as Nicolo de' Conti (Venetian, 1419-1444), produced personal accounts more or less accurate, chiefly less.

All this while, there had been from very early times (1000-400 B.C.) an ever-increasing coasting trade from Southern India (Dravidian), and afterwards from Greece, Rome, Persia, Arabia, and India generally, which on the decline of Roman power passed into Arab and Persian hands in the seventh century, leading eventually by the fourteenth century to the establishment of Islam in the whole of Tanah Maláyu, as the Malays call their own country. So by the time the Portuguese and other Europeans, beginning with Affonso d'Albuquerque in 1511, appeared among the Malays as conquerors in search of the spice trade, a great deal of information as to commercial possibilities had been accumulated in Europe. After the arrival of the Portuguese the story of the Malayan regions takes on a new aspect.

The many recorded traditions of the Malays previous to the advent of the Muhammadans and Europeans, especially in Java and Sumatra, though backed by an immense number of inscriptions and monuments—some of them magnificent—are all disappointing as historical documents. In fact, the most remarkable thing about them is that with so much evidence there should be so little acceptable history. There are points in the early traditions, however, that come out with some certainty.

Malay rulers and ruling families have long delighted in tracing their descent from Sikandar Zu'lkarain (Alexander the Great), which may fairly be taken to mean that just as Megasthenes, the ambassador of Seleucus Nicator at the Court of Chandragupta (306-298 B.C.), the Mauryan Emperor of India, soon after Alexander's date (356-323), knew of the Malayan spice trade, so had the fame of Alexander reached the Malays at the same time. Next, the Malays have adopted the distinctive Saka era of India, starting from A.D. 78, and by the time that Fa Hian is found, as above stated, dwelling for a while in Java (412-414), Hinduism was established and Buddhism commencing to make its way. The Hinduism was of the Śaiva (old animistic) form, and the Buddhism of the Mahāyāna (Hinduised ritualistic) school. These last two facts support the trend of the traditions, which is that the Hinduism came through Sumatra into Java in the first century, A.D., from South India (Dravidian), and the Buddhism from further North a couple of centuries later.

There are traces of ancient Hinduism in Borneo up to the fifth century, which should perhaps be connected with Châmpâ (Cochin-China) or Kambûja (Cambodia).

Chronicles in Java exhibit for what they may be worth a continuous series of dates, which still require collating to settle their real value, onwards from their year one (A.D. 74), when there arrived their first hero, Aji Śâka from India. They then record the gradual spread of Hinduism over the whole country till 269, and the building of the first temple (Chândi Mâling) in 285. The process of settlement continued till 417, by which time, in 384, a dynasty had been established at Astina, which in its alternative form of Astina Pûra is closely reminiscent of Hastinâpura, the Delhi of legend. This line of Astina lasted till 662. During this time Hinduism had given place to Buddhism, and the splendid monument of Boro Bûdûr was raised before 856 by the Mahârâjâdhirâja Adityavarma, probably Parikisit (617-649) or Udiâna (649-662) of Astina. It entirely covers a hillock one furlong square and 100 ft. high, and is an object lesson by means of sculpture in Mahâyâni Buddhism.

The Astina Dynasty was succeeded by the Malâwa Pâti (662-672) after which came that of Mendang Kamûlan or Brambânan (Parambânan, 732-892), the builders of the wonderful groups of temples of a greatly Hinduised Mahâyâni type (Parambânan and Chândi Séwu). This Dynasty, a member of which was Aji Jáya Báya (774-830), who wrote a Chronicle and attacked Cochin-China (Châmpâ) in 774 and 787, was followed by the better remembered lines of Jangâla (892-1158), which produced Pânji (c. 1130-1158), the great hero of Javan story, and Pajajâran (with Koripan, 1158-1295). The country now tended to revert to Śaiva Hinduism of a distinctly South Indian (Dravidian) type: so that in speaking of a "Hindu" dynasty in Java at this period a highly Hinduised form of Buddhism is indicated. Of the line of Pajajâran, Munding Sâri (1184-1195) is, as Hâji Pûrwa, said to have been the first royal convert to Islam in 1193. In 1295, two years after Kublai Khan's invasion (1293), the Pajajâran Kings were followed by the great line of Majapâhit (1295-1477), grown out of a local dynasty at Tumâpel (1232-1275). They were Hindus and extended the power of the Javanese Malays, grown by degrees more and more powerful since the time of Hâji Pûrwa, who set up a kingdom at Demâk and Pâjang (1477-1606), which ruled all Java.

In their time two notable events happened. Firstly, in 1508 the Portuguese appeared in Sumatra, and in 1511 took Malacca, starting at once explorations into the Archipelago generally. Secondly, in 1551 the Matârem family came to the front and afterwards produced Panambâhan Sênâpâti (1614-1624), the last independent native ruler in Java. He set up his throne at Matârem and was succeeded by Sultân Sêda Krâpiah (1624-1636), in whose days the Dutch and English appeared as conquerors. Hinduism did not of course die easily and the Portuguese found Hindu communities in Bantam on their arrival there in 1511.

While the Hindu and Buddhist kingdoms had been developing in Java, a similar process had been going on in Sumatra at Menangkâbau in the hills of the modern Pâdang, of which unfortunately hardly any record had survived, though it attained such fame among the Malays as to make many of them consider it to be the cradle of their race. Hindu and Buddhist temples are numerous, and there is a notable inscription of A.D. 656; but it is said that it was not till 1160 that the kingdom was sufficiently consolidated to be able to create colonies and spread abroad beyond the Island. Like the Javan Hinduised Buddhists, the Menangkábaus succumbed to Islam in the fourteenth century. There is nothing of prominent historical note in pre-Islamic days elsewhere in the land of the Malays.

Malay history now enters on its last phase, the struggle between the maritime nations of Western Europe for the spice trade and the power necessary to secure it. The Portuguese came first into Sumatra in 1508, when Malacca, on the Peninsula hard by, was the chief port for pepper. In 1511 Afonso d'Albuquerque occupied Malacca, and sent out a party of explorers into the Archipelago. This led to the discovery of the Philippines by one of them, Francisco Serrão, who after being wrecked, accidentally made his way to Mindanao in 1514. In the same year the Portuguese established themselves in Ternate. In 1519 the Spaniards sent an expedition under Ferdinand Magellan to claim the Moluccas and thus discovered Borneo. By 1529 the spheres of the rival powers were settled, the Spaniards getting the Philippines and the Portuguese governing the Moluccas from Ternate. In 1546 Francisco de Xavier, the Spanish missionary (1506-1552), appeared on the scene, and the subsequent attempts to forcibly Christianise the people led to a bitter animosity against the Portuguese, who thus contributed to their own ultimate downfall. Finally, from 1530 to 1640 Portugal and Spain were united under the latter.

Meanwhile, the French pirates from Dieppe between 1527-1539 and English competitors under Drake (1579), Lancaster (1591), and Middleton (1604) began to dispute the trade with Portugal and Spain, and in 1595 the Dutch arrived, partly to revenge themselves on the Spanish for their misdeeds in the Netherlands, and partly to break the Spanish-Portuguese monopoly in the spice trade and to "corner" pepper. In 1602 the Dutch East India Company was formed, and by 1604 it was already stronger than the Portuguese on the seas, enabling its representatives to force the Portuguese to an armistice in 1608. In 1609 Pieter Both was the first Governor-General with his capital at Jákatra (1611), which was named Batavia in 1619.

In 1600 the English East India Company arose, and the acute rivalry thus created with the Dutch purported to end in the Treaty of Defence (1620) by which the Dutch and English Companies arranged to co-operate. This arrangement was never properly kept, and the Dutch "massacred" the English at Amboyna in 1623, an act which roused ill-feeling for a long while and was not redressed till 1654 under Oliver Cromwell. The Treaty lapsed in 1637, and thereafter for various reasons Dutch power steadily increased, until the English retired from all points, except Benkulen in Sumatra, in 1684.

The Dutch East India Company was now completely in the ascendant, and ruled the country solely in its own interests. Individual Dutch families became enormously rich at the cost of the Malay population, but in spite of rebellions, which their conduct caused, the Dutch became supreme rulers in the Archipelago by 1740. The gravest abuses, however, continued, until, because of them and of English competition in the spice trade from India, the Company was brought down in 1798, and superseded by a Council of the (Dutch) Asiatic Possessions.

The Napoleonic wars induced the English in 1810 to conquer Java and much of the Archipelago, and Sir Stamford Raffles became administrator of the Dutch Malay Possessions under the British East India Company (1811-1816), carrying out many much-needed reforms. In 1816 they were ceded back under the Treaty of Vienna (1814). This led to the formation of the British Settlements in the Straits: Singapore in 1819, Malacca finally in 1824, and Penang, which, however, had been established as early as 1786. By 1824 the English were recognised as supreme in the Malay Peninsula. The Straits Settlements were ruled by the East India Company till 1867, when they became a Crown Colony. In 1874 and subsequent years, Perak and a number of other native states were added by "Protection," and are now known as the Federated Malay States. In 1909 yet others were added by the treaty with Siam, those still remaining in the Peninsula being under Siamese suzerainty. All British possessions in the Peninsula are governed from Singapore.

THE PANAMALAI ROCK-TEMPLE INSCRIPTION OF RĀJASIMHA.

By K. G. SANKARA AIYAR, B.A., B.L.; TRIVANDRUM.

THIS small paper is substantially the reproduction of a letter dated 8th September, 1919, written by me to Dr. Jouveau-Dubreuil, who discovered the Panamalai inscription, regarding its correct reading and interpretation. Panamalai is a village in the Villuppuram Taluk of the South Arcot District in the Madras Presidency. Round the base of the rock-temple in that village, there is engraved in a single line an inscription in Grantha-Pallava alphabet, which Dr. Dubreuil has edited and translated in his Pallava Antiquities (l. 11-23). Concerning the condition of the inscription, he writes, "The beginning and the end of the inscription are concealed by a structure of bricks built in front of the temple. So a portion of the first sentence, and the whole of the last part of the inscription are missing. The letters have been preserved excellently well except towards the middle wherefrom a stone which contained some letters has been removed." He adds that he published in July 1915 a tentative translation of the inscription. As this seemed to be insufficient, Mr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, the author of Ancient India, gave him a more correct translation from his reproduction of the inscription in Plate I, which we add below for comparison and reference:—"Droni, famed for the might of his arm, was born a (minor) incarnation of Siva. From him of the name Droni, pure by the performance of great penance, there appeared, as the sciences of the Vedāṅga from the Veda, the ruler of the earth named Pallava. From whom (did descend), as the floods of the Ganges from the moon, the great family of the Pallavas, sanctified by treading in the path (of righteousness), holy and so worthy of great esteem. A dynasty of paramount sovereigns, made pure by the frequent baths at the conclusion of the (numerous) horse sacrifices performed by them. The chief of this family, the like of which did not exist before, and which belonged to the most holy tribe (gotra) of Bharadvaja; whose fame had spread over the circle of the world which was taken forcible possession of (conquered) by the undiminished prowess of his arm; who, (born) from him (who bore) the title Ekamalla, as Guha (Subrahmanya) from God Paramēśvara, shone with the prowess of his arm; who was known by the name Rājasimha of sanctified reputation, radiant in warlike pride made firm by his own strength; who was king of lions by the destruction of the elephants, the enemy kings; who was destroyer of the crowd of hostile kings and maker of all things auspicious; His mind purified by the unremitting hold of devotion (to God), having given always . . . To whom Siva of the deer-spotted (moon) crest . . ."

It seems to me that both the published text and translation of this inscription are capable of improvement. Neither Dr. Dubreuil, nor Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyangar seem to have noticed that the inscription is in verses. Dr. Dubreuil's reference to the first sentence confirms this inference. I found that the inscription was made up of the major part of the fourth quarter of a Sragdharā verse, almost the whole of two other Sragdharā verses, the first three quarters of a Vasantatilaka verse, an Indravajrā verse, and the major part of the first two quarters of a fourth Sragdharā verse. The first three quarters and the first three syllables of the fourth quarter of the first Sragdharā verse, syllables 17 to 19 of the second quarter and 5 to 7 of the third quarter of the second Sragdharā verse, the fourth quarter of the Vasantatilaka verse, and the first six syllables of the first, the fourteenth and fifteenth syllables of the second, and the whole of the third and fourth quarters of the fourth Sragdharā verse are missing. I give below my reading of the inscription rearranged as verses, and omissions supplied enclosed in small, and doubtful readings in big, brackets.

I may state here that Dr. Dubreuil, and the late Mr. T. A. Gopinatha Rao were in substantial agreement with me as regards the reading of the text. I will now give my rendering of this inscription, and then discuss the proper reading and interpretation of individual words and phrases.

Translation.

Farfamed for the strength of his arm, was born (Asvatthaman), the son of Drona (the preceptor of the Kauravas and the Pandawas), an embodiment of (Siva), the destroyer of the (three) cities (of the Asuras, i.e., demons; Siva is aptly the original of Asvatthaman who destroyed the embryos of the Pāṇḍavas in revenge for his father's death caused by a false report of his own death by Yudhishthira in the Bhārata war). . . .

Then from that pure Aśvatthaman, there came out into men's view, the lover of the spacious earth, named Pallava, who had accumulated great penance, as from the Vedic collection (sprang forth) the auxiliary sciences (of the Veda).

From whom this great family of the Pallavas which is worthy of honour, because of its (constant) treading in the (ancient) holy path (of righteousness), (spread continuously out), as, from the haremaked (moon), the continuous flow of the celestial Ganges (Mandāking is a distinctive term for the celestial course of the Ganges before it falls on earth).

From Ekamalla Deva (the sole strong—lit. combatant-lord) whose fame was published throughout the circle of the spacious earth won by the undiminished prowess of his arm, and who was the banner of the Pallava (race) of universal sovereigns and enjoyers of the earth who were purified of their sins (of conquest) by the closing baths of the horse-sacrifice (which can be performed only after letting loose the sacrificial horse to wander freely for a year and conquering all kings who seek to restrain its movements), who were untouched by the least particle of danger, and who were sprung from the most pure family of Bharadvāja (a Vedic seer). From him (was born), like Guha (Subrahmaṇya, so called because of his secret birth among the reeds—cf. शरवणभवः; as God of war, he is compared with Rājasimha), he, who shone by routing (?) other (rulers of earth);

Who was mighty in his strength; who (was endowed with) great valour (proud with victory in—seen in?) battle; who (lived in) well-known and auspicious fame as Rājasimha; who was (verily) a Rājasimha (lion of kings) by his having uprooted the elephants, i.e. the enemy kings; . . . .

He took away the elevations (in power and fame) of the tribe of hostile (kings). He was also the doer of an (unbroken) succession of auspicious deeds; and, in his mind, purified by constantly-fostered devotion, (Śiva), who wears on his crest the deermarked (moon), holds (his foot). (The moonspot is variously imaged as the hare, the deer, etc).

(The remaining lines, as they stand, are obscure.)

We will now note and discuss the differences in reading and interpretation between ourselves and Mr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar.

His व in उवपादि is not supported by the plate. The metre, moreover, requires here a long vowel like 'ओ' in our नो. His द्रोणि न is wrong for द्रोणिनी, for the metre requires a long vowel or a short vowel followed by a conjunct consonant after द्रो, the name is not द्रोणि but द्रोणिनी, and the plate distinctly reads ना, and the Sanskrit for 'name' is नाम. Plate I reads तस्मात्ति and not तस्माद्भि and तस्मात् + ति = तस्मात्ति. The Sanskrit for 'Veda' is आम्नाय and its ablative is आम्नायात् and not आम्नयत्, and metre also requires both these vowels to be long. The plate also reads them as long. पञ्चवाक्यः is wrong for पञ्चवाक्यः. The अ between त् and वा is an obvious omission. And the plate as also the Sanskrit for 'named' requires आक्यः for आक्यः. Mr. Krishnaswami suggests emendation of पावने to पावना wrongly construing it with अन्वयः instead of with पादि. The genitive of सञ्जाद is सञ्जादो and not सञ्जादः, and the plate also reads as I do. पञ्चवाना before विमलतर is obviously a mistake for the genitive पञ्चवानो. Metre requires six long vowels in अञ्जद्विनिविनासि. So we should read अ. वी, and सी. The plate is clear as to स at the end. I take सस्मोर्जित to qualify वा, and add a final visarga. But Mr. Krishnaswami takes it to qualify इव implied in वृत् which is impossible, for समरवृत् means, not 'warlike pride', but 'proud with battle'. In any case he should at least have read a final anusvāra, and, if the reading is really वृत्, his construction is clearly impossible. महामहव should obviously be महाप्रभावः as the metre requires and, except for the final visarga, as the plate clearly reads. The final visarga is required by sense, syntax, and metre. Mr. Krishnaswami emends प्रभाव into सुभव, thereby making the passage meaningless. Metre requires an initial long vowel or short vowel followed by a conjunct consonant in उद्भूत, and so does the meaning. So I read उद्भूत. समुच्चयानां is wrong for the plate reading समुच्चयानां which the meaning also requires. कल्याणपरंपरानां is an obvious mistake for कल्याणपरंपरानां. सभूत and सभूत are both meaningless mistakes for संभूत as the sense and metre require, though we have to add an anusvāra to the plate reading. The plate reads a visarga between के and सज्ज, and सज्जं not सज्ज, as the metre also requires. Metre requires नानाः for ननाः. The plate distinctly reads सद्गुणानां and not सद्गुणादे, also तन्नेतिधर्मं and not तन्नेतिधर्मम्.

प्रथित means not merely 'famed', but 'farfamed'. By translating 'was born a minor incarnation of Siva', Mr. Krishnaswami has taken भवः with उद्विपाद, though a term like इव is wanting, instead of with द्रोणिः. He has failed to bring out the comparison implied in पुरारेः. He omits to translate अयः निक्षिप्त means 'accumulated', not 'performed'. He has wrongly taken निक्षिप्तसुतसो with the ablative निम्नलात् instead of the nominative महीवहनः. He has translated अङ्गविद्याः by 'sciences of the Vedānga' instead of 'the Vedānga sciences'. He has failed to bring out the force of the purposeful use of विसर and प्रवाहः. He omits एवः. He has failed to note the distinctive use of मेधाकिनी for the celestial course of the Ganges (cf. मेधाकिनी विवाहगा-Amara). The Pitris, i.e., the spirits of the dead are said to bathe in its waters, to be purified of their sins, and, since they abide in the moon, the मेधाकिनी was perhaps imagined to flow from the moon. The repeated use of पद्मवानां is not explained by Mr. Krishnaswami. He, unauthorised, makes the Āśvamedhas numerous, and the baths at their conclusion frequent. He omits भूभुजाः. He takes अद्भुता with अन्वयः, and as identical with अद्भुत, whereas the one means 'invincible', and the other 'unseen'. And अद्भुता is feminine, while अन्वयः is masculine. So I read it as अद्भुत + आपद्मवानां. He has paraphrased केतोः into 'chief' instead of rendering it as 'banner'. विमल means 'pure' and not 'holy'. वंश means neither 'gotra', nor 'tribe', but 'family'. उद्भवानां means 'sprung from', not 'belonged to'. The passage केतोः कीर्तिः he applies to Rājasiṃha, instead of Ekamalla Deva, as the ablative indicates. The metre does not allow the reading of any syllable between पर and भू, and so, this inscription, at any rate, does not permit any reference to the name of the father of Rājasiṃha or Guha as Mr. Krishnaswami suggests, but this inscription clearly proves that Rājasiṃha was a devotee of Siva, a fact which both Dr. Dubreuil and Mr. Krishnaswami have failed to note, and which Mr. Krishnaswami's translation fails to bring out. He takes देवात् with पर . . . and not with एकमल्लात् as the ablative indicates. The knowledge from other sources that the name of Rājasiṃha's father was Paramēśvaravarman I, and that consequently, 'Ekamalla' must have been only one of the latter's titles, has apparently influenced Dr. Dubreuil to seek for his name itself in this inscription, and so he suggests that, after गृह इ we should read परमाश्वराजविरासीन् . . . भुजद्रविचारभासीन्. But this reading assumes that nearly the whole of a śloka has to be filled up, and there is no gap in this part of the inscription that would justify us in supplying a whole śloka here. So the suggested reading is untenable. विस्मृत means not 'spread', but 'published'. The passage 'who bore the title' of the translation has nothing corresponding to it in the text. He has rendered महाप्रभावः as 'radiant', and not 'of great valour.' He takes पुण्डरीकान्तः with Rājasimha instead of with विश्वस्त and वः उद्धृत means not merely 'destroyed', but 'uprooted'. He has interpreted राजसिंहः as 'king of lions' instead of 'lion of kings'. 'King of lions' would mean that he himself was literally a lion, and that he had only literal lions for his subjects. 'Lion of kings', on the other hand, would mean that he was a king, but, among kings, what a lion is to the beasts of the forest, i.e., their king. It is a synonym for 'king of kings'. If the engraver of the inscription had meant 'king of lions', he would have written सिंहराजः. Mr. Krishnaswami translates समुच्छ्रयानां हति as merely 'destroyer'. He has rendered वर्ग by 'crowd' instead of 'tribe'. He has rendered सर्व by 'all'. He has not understood the penultimate śloka properly. He confuses धत्ते='holds' with दत्त्वा='having given', and संभृत='fostered' with समृत or सभृत which, in themselves, are meaningless, but which he takes to mean 'unrenittingly holding'. वस्तु he translates as 'to whom' instead of 'of whom', and मृगांक he takes to mean 'deerspotted' instead of 'deermarked'.

In conclusion we may note that the only king, among the Pallavas, who had the characteristic surname of Rājasimha, was Narasimhavarman II (A.D. 685-712), that therefore the Panamalai inscription was engraved in his time, and that this inscription proves that, at the time of Rājasimha, different kinds of alphabets were used, and that a difference in the stage of evolution of the letters does not at all indicate a difference in the ages.

MISCELLANEA.

SAMĀJA.

The demonstration by Mr. N. G. Majumdar (ante, Aug. 1918, p. 221) that in the Rāmāyaṇa, Rāmāyaṇa, and Jātaka the word samāja has the technical meaning of 'theatre', in the various senses of that word, is conclusive. His article throws welcome light upon Asoka's Rock-edict I. It may be useful to supplement it by noting that the Cambridge translators of the Jātaka completely misunderstood the passages cited by Mr. Majumdar. In Jātaka No. 318 (transl., Vol. III, p. 41) they render samājāna karontā by 'the actors gathered a crowd about them', and samāja mātale as 'in the midst of the people.' 'Giving a performance' and 'on the stage' would render the true sense.

The second passage quoted by Mr. Majumdar from Fausbøll's text (vi, 277), Passa malle samajjāminā, etc., is part of Jātaka No. 545, and is Englished by the Cambridge translators (vol. vi, p. 135) 'See the wrestlers in the crowd striking their doubled arms.' The words 'in the ring' or 'on the stage' should be substituted for 'in the crowd'.

BOOK-NOTICE.

SOURCES OF VIJAYANAGAR HISTORY: Selected and Edited for the University of Madras by S. KRISHNASWAMI AYYANGAR, M.A., Professor of Indian History and Archaeology. University of Madras. 1919.

This is just such a book as the Professor of Indian History at an Indian University ought to produce and both the writer and the University are to be congratulated on its production. The true way to compile real History is to have the original sources at hand without alteration. Only then can the historian judge for himself and not merely reproduce the story through another's spectacles, and it is only historical data collected in this way that are of intrinsic value.

Mr. Sewall in his Forgotten Empire did invaluable service to the History of Southern India by compiling his pioneer work from such original sources as were available to him, and the fundamental nature of his method has already been proved by the number of volumes and tracts on points of detail which have been published since, all based or purporting to be based on original documents, and culminating in this most important work.

It is important because it gives us the ipsissima verba of the authorities on which the historian has to rely (final judgment on their individual and relative value must come later), and because by seeking them out and collecting them together, while not pretending to be exhaustive, its author cannot but five others qualified for the purpose to do likewise.

Prof. S. K. Ayyangar has further benefited the present-day reader by giving him the advantage of his great personal knowledge of the subject in his introduction and his abstracts of the quotations.

A word as to the method adopted in producing the book. A University Research Student, Mr. A. Rangaswami Sarasvati, has been employed to make a "systematic collection of passages in both Telugu and Sanskrit literature bearing upon the History of the Empire of Vijayanagar." This is entirely right.

It shows the rising generation of University men the right path in the first place, and it collects casual references to current political events and stories in the ordinary literature of the day. Such references are more likely to have no partisan or other reason for hiding the truth as known to the writer than are set histories or chronicles. Whether the writer knew the truth is another question which can only be solved by the collection of all such references as are available. In this view the value of the method pursued by Prof. Ayyangar comes clearly before us, and I cannot help hoping that the example he has set will encourage his University to continue the task in every direction open to it.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

SUNNEE, DATED GOLD MOHAR.

Peter Mundy (Travels, Hak. Soc. ed. vol. II, p. 310) makes, in 1633, the following remarks on money in Surat in his day:—

"Coyne is of good gold, silver, Copper, etts., viz.—Of gold there is only Mohores or Sunnees and half ones ditto, the whole one worth about 5 nobles English, sometymes more or lesse."

The term "Sunnee" is usually explained as a gold mohar and derived from sonā, gold. But if the old writers meant suni, they would have written "soonee" or something similar, and if "sunnee" was a common term for the gold mohar 300 years ago, it is odd that no form like soni, sohani, suni, sunni, is to be found now. The more reasonable explanation seems to be that sani, sanki, saniyd, sankiye, were vernacular forms meaning a dated mohar (from sani, sank, a year), one which deteriorated in value as the date became old, as in the case of saniat or dated (sonaut) rupees. Hence the importance of rapid sale as is shown by the following quotations:—

NOTES FROM OLD FACTORY RECORDS.

15. Punishment for Coining.

13 May 1717. Consultation at Fort St. George. The President acquainting the Board that he has got a black fellow nam'd Peremaul (Perumāl) in the Cockhouse, whom he confin'd upon a discovery which the Shroffs [sharāf, money-changer] made of his bringing bad Fanams [small silver coins] to be chang'd, which the said Peremaul upon examination confess'd to him as Follows—That his brother Moorta (? Mōrti) a Malabar Madrāsi [East or West Coast at that time] Goldsmith, Inhabitant of St. Thomas, gave him 18 fa. to bring to Madras to buy silver with of the Shroffs, which silver he was to carry back to his brother in St. Thomas for coining of more Fanams. The said Peremaul was sent for in, and being re-examin'd confess'd the Fact to the board in manner before-mention'd, which affair being debated, and the discredit our Mint may be brought into (which is at present in the greatest repute of any in the Mogul's [Delhi Emperors and Deccan Sovereigns] dominions) consider'd, the board think it highly necessary that the said Peremaul should be made a publick example for being accessory to his brother's knavery (there having at times crept in from St. Thomas several parcels of bad Fanams, but this is the first person that could ever be discover'd); according[ly], the Following resolutions are agreed upon.

That the Choultry [Court House] Justices do meet at the Choultry on Fryday next between nine and ten a clock in the morning, to direct the said Peremaul to be put in the Pillory where he is to Stand two hours, after which to have both his ears cut off, and be whip'd out of the Hon. Company's bounds, never to set his Foot therein again under penalty of being sent a Slave to the West Coast upon his being discover'd. (Madras Public Consultations, vol. 87).

GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF ANCIENT AND MEDIEVAL INDIA.

By NUNDOLAL DEY, M.A., B.L.

Preface to the Second Edition.

In the present edition, considerable additions have been made to the names and accounts of places in the light of later researches, and blemishes of the previous edition removed as far as possible. The arrangement of names of places has been made strictly alphabetical in view of its greater convenience for reference, and authorities supplied for statements that were in want of such support.

The materials for the work have been, I need hardly add, compiled from a variety of sources—Sanskrit, Pali, etc., including, of course, works of many European writers interested in Indian antiquities.

Ancient Geography is an essential adjunct to history, and the usefulness of a compendium of such geographical information for a full and just appreciation of the latter hardly needs any mention, specially when time has mutilated or obscured the ancient names of places that usually figure in the historical narratives. Indian history, ancient or mediæval, and the documents upon which it is principally based, are full of these names; and unless they are elucidated in a systematic way as far as possible, the path of the historian and, for the matter of that, of the ordinary readers of history, will continue uneasy for this difficulty alone.

A study of the words in this Dictionary will show that time has mutilated many original names almost out of recognition. The restoration of the altered derivatives to their genuine originals is not, however, an impossibility in view of the fact that most of the changes are found not to have taken place haphazardly. Barring names displaced by new ones by some cause or other, they appear in most cases to be governed by the rules of Prākṛit grammars, except where the peculiar brogue of a particular place has checked or modified the application of the rules. I give below some of the principal rules illustrating them by words from the toponymy of this Dictionary :—

L—ELISIONS.

Many of the aforesaid changes, which are formed by a process of contraction, may be accounted for by the application of the well-known rule of elision of the Prākṛita grammars: the consonants k, g, ch, j, t, d, p, y and v when non-initial and not compounded are elided.<sup>1</sup> I give only a few illustrations:—

Elision of k, as Kausikī, Kusi ; Sūrpāraka, Supāra ; Aparāntaka, Aparānta ; Śākambhārī, Sambhār.

„ „ g, as Bhṛigu-kachchha, Bharu-kachchha, Baroach ; affix nagara, nār ; Trigartta, Tahora.

„ „ y, as Ayodhyā, Āudh ; Nārāyaṇasara, Nārānsar ; Ujjayinī, Ujjaini ; Sañjayanti, Sañjān.

„ „ v, as Yavananagara, Junāgar ; Yavanapura, Jaunpur ; Karṇa-suvarṇa, Kānsanā.

Besides the above, the following letters are often elided:—

(1) Final a, as the affixes Pura, Pur ; Nagara, Nagar ; Grāma, Grām ; sometimes initial a, as Apāpa-puri, Pāpa.

VII.—SYNONYMS.

Synonyms are frequently used for names of places, as Hastināpura, Gajasāh-vyayanagara, Nāgapura; Kumārasvāmi, Kārttikaśvāmi, Subrahmayā; Gaṇḍakī, Gallakī; Urāgapura, Nāgapura; Goratha Parvata or Godhana-giri, Bāthāni-kā-pāhār; Mṛigadāva, Śarasāganātha (Sārṇath); Kusumapura (Kumrār), Puṣhpapura; Mataṅga-śrama, Gandha-hastī stūpa; Pradyumnanagara, Mārapura.

VIII.—ABBREVIATIONS.

Sometimes names are formed by the clipping of a member of a compound word, as Kārttika-swāmi, Svāmi-tīrtha; Bhīma-rathā, Bhīmā; Tuljā-bhavanī, Tuljāpur or Bhavānīnagar; Bālu-bāhīni, Bāgin; Kṛishṇa-veṇvā, Kṛishṇā or Veṇvā; Ahichhatra, Chhatravatī; Dhanushkoṭī Tīrtha, Dhanu-Tīrtha or Koṭī Tīrtha; Rishya-śrīṅgagiri, Śrīṅgārī; Tāmrachuda-kroṇa, Karura; Pañchāpsarā Tīrtha, Pañcha Tīrtha; Bikrama-ilā-saṅghārāma, Śilā-saṅgam.

IX.—COMPOUNDING OF LETTERS.

Disconnected letters, especially r, are compounded by the elision of the middle vowel, as Pārālī-grāma (or pura), Pārālī-gēon, Palu-gēon; Pārasya, Pārsia (Persia).

The rules of phonetic changes given above cannot but remain tentative so long as they are not confirmed by a fuller induction; but they may be of some help in tracing the history of a word from its ancient form to its present structure through the several mutations or transformations it has undergone in its passage from place to place, climate to climate, or one zone of influences to another. A complete set of established rules considered along with the testimony of authoritative records, traditions, events, and superstitions, is calculated to be the criterion of both past and future identifications of names of places, and the labour devoted to this subject can never be labour pent in vain.

My cordial thanks are due to my nephew, Mr. Narendranath Law, M.A., B.L., Premchand Roychand Scholar and author of Studies in Ancient Hindu Polity, Promotion of Learning in India, etc., for the help I have received from him.

The system of transliteration followed in this work is the same as that of Sir Monier Monier-Williams' Sanskrit-English Dictionary with only this difference that o, v, and w have been used as interchangeable.

The map appended hereto is the same as that used in the first edition. Though the ancient names of places added in this edition have not been shown on the map, yet it may help the reader to make a rough idea of their locations with reference to those that do appear.

PART I.

ANCIENT NAMES.

A

Âbhira—The south-eastern portion of Gujarat about the mouths of the Nerbudda was called Âbhira,—the Aberia of the Greeks. McCrindle states that the country of the Âbhīras lay to the east of the Indus where it bifurcates to form the delta (McCrindle's Ptolemy, p. 140; Vishṇu P., ch. 5). The Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa (ch. 6) also says that the Indus flowed through the country of Âbhira. According to the Mahābhārata (Sabhā Parva, ch. 31), the bhīras lived near the seashore and on the bank of the Sarasvatī, a river near Somnāth in Gujarat. Sir Henry Elliot says that the country on the western coast of India from the Tapti to Devagadh is called Âbhira (Elliot's Supplemental Glossary, vol. 1, pp. 2, 3). Mr. W. H. Schoff is of opinion that it is the southern part of Gujarat, which contains Surat (Periplus of the Erythraean Sea, pp. 39, 175). According to Lassen, Âbhira is the Ophir of the Bible. The Tārā Tantra says that the country of Âbhira extended from Konkana southwards to the western bank of the river Tāpī (see Ward's History, Literature and Religion of the Hindus, Vol. 1, p. 559).

Abhisāra—Same as Abhisāri (Padma Purāṇa, Âdikhaṇḍa, ch. 6).

Abhisāri—Hazara (country), the Abisares of the Greeks: it forms the north-western district of the Peshawar division. It was conquered by Arjuna [(Mahābhārata), Sabhā-Parva, ch. 27; JASB. (1852) p. 234]. But Dr. Stein identifies the kingdom of Abhisāra with the tract of the lower and middle hills between the Vitastā (Jhelum) and Chandrabhāgā (Chenab) including the state of Rājāpurī (Rajauri) in Kāśmīra.

Abimukta—Benares (Śiva-Purāṇa, Sanatkumārasamhitā, ch. 41; Matsya Purāṇa, chs. 182-184).

Acesines—The river Chenab in the Panjab: it is the corruption of Asikni of the Rig-Veda (x, 75).

Achekhoda-Sarovara—Achekhvat in Kāśmīra, described by Bāṇabhaṭṭa in his Kādambarī (see also Bilhana's Vikramāṅka-deva-charita, xviii, 53). It is six miles from Mārttaṇḍa. The Siddhāśrama was situated on the bank of this lake (Bṛīhat-Nāradya Purāṇa, ch. 1).

Achinta—Ajanta, about fifty-five miles to the north-east of Ellora in Central India. In the Achinta monastery resided Ārya Saṅga (perhaps Asaṅga), the founder of the Yogāchārya school of the Buddhists (S. C. Das's Indian Pundits in the Land of Snow). It is celebrated for its caves and viharas, which belong to the fifth and sixth centuries of the Christian era. An inscription there shows that the caves were caused to be excavated by a Sthavira named Achala.

Achiravati—The river Rapti in Oudh, on which the town of Śrāvastī was situated (Varāha P., ch. 214; Tevijja-sutta in the Sacred Books of the East, Vol. XI). It was also called Ajiravati and its shortened form is Airāvati. It is a tributary of the Sarayu.

Ādāra-vallī—The Aravali Mountains (Kunte's Vicissitudes of Aryan Civilization, p. 380): see Āryavarita.

Abhicchātra—Same as Abhicchhātra (Epigraphia Indica, II, p. 243 note).

Adhirāja—Same as Karusha: the country of Rewa. It was the kingdom of Dantavakra who was killed by Kṛishṇa in Mathura (Padma P., Pātāla, ch. 35). It was conquered by Sahadeva, one of the five Pāṇdavas (Mahābhārata, Sabhā P., ch. 30).

Adikota—Another name for Ahichchhatra.

Agalassia.—See Angalaukika.

Agastya-ārama—1. Twenty-four miles to the south-east of Nasik, now called Agasti-puri: it was the hermitage of Rishi Agastya. 2. Akolha, to the east of Nasik, was also the hermitage of Agastya (Rāmāyaṇa, Āraṇyakāṇḍa, ch. 11). 3. Kolhapur in the province of Bombay. 4. Sarai-Aghat, forty miles south-west of Itah and about a mile to the north-west of Sankisa in the United Provinces (Führer's Monumental Antiquities and Inscriptions). 5. Agastya Rishi is still said to reside, as he is believed to be alive, at the Agastya-kūṭa mountain in Tinnevely, from which the river Tāmraparā takes its rise (Caldwell's Dravidian Grammar, Introduction, p. 118, Bhāsa's Avimdraka, Act iv). See Tāmraparā Malaya-girl and Bārā. 6. About twelve miles from Rudra-prayāga in Garwal is a village called Agastyamuni which is said to have been the hermitage of the Rishi. 7. On the Vaidūrya-Parvata or Satpura Hill (Mahābh., Vana, ch. 88). 8. See Vedaranya. Agastya introduced Aryan civilisation into Southern India. He was the author of the Agastya-Saṃhitā, Agastya-Gīta, Sakalādhikāra, &c., (Rām Rāja's Architecture of the Hindus; O. C. Gangoly's South Indian Bronzes, p. 4).

Aggalava-chetiya—It is about 350 miles to the north of Saākāśya in Sugana somewhere near Khalsi where Buddha passed his sixteenth vassa. Alavaka Yakkha resided at this place. Fa Hian's Travels, xvii; JRAS., 1891, pp. 338, 339). See Alavi.

Agnipura—Same as Māhishmati: the town was protected by Agni, the god of fire (Mahābh., Anuśāsana, ch. 25; Jaimini-Bhārata, ch. 15).

Agravana—Agra, one of the vanas of Vraja-maṇḍala. It is called Agravana, as the first starting point for a pilgrim on his circumambulation of Vraja,—the holy scene of Kṛishṇa's adventures. According to Vaiṣṇava authorities, it was covered by forests for many centuries, before Rāpa and Sanātana, the celebrated followers of Chaitanya, came here for the purpose of starting on the exploration of Vrindāvana. Buhlol Lōdi founded the new city of Agra and towards the close of the fifteenth century, his son Secunder Lodi removed the seat of government from Delhi to Agra, and fixed his residence on the opposite side of the present city on the bank of the river Jamuna, where also resided Ibrahim Lodi and Baber, the founder of the Mughal dynasty (CR., vol. 79, p. 71,—Keene's Medieval India). Baber died in 1530 and was interred at the garden called Charbagh which was afterwards called Rambagh by Akbar's courtiers: his remains were subsequently removed to Kabul. The fort built by Akbar contains one of the most beautiful palaces in India, especially that portion of it called the Saman-Buruj (Jasmine Tower) which was constructed by Shah Jahan.

Ahichchhatra—Ramnagar, twenty miles west of Bareilly, in Rohilkhand. The name of Ahichchhatra is at present confined to the great fortress in the lands of Alampur Kot and Nasratganj. It was the capital of North Pāñchāla or Rohilkhand (Dr. Führer, MAI., and Cunningham, Anc. Geo., p. 359). It was also called Chhatravati (Mahābhārata, Ādi-parva, ch. 168). It is Adichchhatra of the inscriptions (Epigraphia Indica, vol. II, p. 432, note by Dr. Führer). It is also called Ahikahetra (Mahābhārata, Vana P., ch. 252). In Jaina works, Ahichhatra is said to be the principal town of the country called Jaṅgala which therefore was another name for North Pāṇchāla (see Weber's Indische Studien, xvi, p. 398).

Ahichhatra—Same as Ahichchhatra.

Ahikshetra—Same as Ahichchhatra.

Ahobala-Nṛisīṣha—A celebrated place of pilgrimage at a short distance to the east of Cuddapah in Sirvel Taluk in the district of Karim in the province of Madras: the image of Nṛisīṣha is in the cavern of a hill called Gaḍurādri. It was visited by Śaṅkarāchāryya and Chaitanya. Three temples stand on the hill—one at the foot, one halfway up, and one at the top; they are considered to be very sacred (Śaṅkara-vijaya; Chaitanya-charitāmṛita, Madhya, ch. 9; Epigraphia Indica, I, 368; III, 240).

Airāvati—1. The river Ravi. 2. The Rapti and Irawadi also are contractions of this name. The Rapti is a river in Oudh, on the south bank of which Sahet-mahet (ancient Śrīvastī) is situated. It is a contraction of Achiravati (see Achiravati).

Ajamati—The river Ajaya in Bengal: the Amystis of Megasthenes. It falls into the Ganges near Katwa. It is mentioned by Arrian. The Gālava Tantra mentions it as Ajaya. The great poet Jayadeva was born on the bank of the Ajaya near Kenduli in the district of Birbhum in Bengal.

Ajiravati—Same as Achiravati (Avaddna-Kalpalatā, ch. 76).

Ajitavati—The little Gandak river [on the north of Kuśinagara (Kasia) where Buddha died. The river is also called Hiraṇyavati.

Ākarāvanti—Malwa, Ākara being East Malwa and Avantī West Malwa (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. I, Pt. I, p. 36 note; see Ind. Ant., vii, 259; Ram., Kish, ch. 41). It is mentioned as Ākaraveṇvāntika in the Bṛhatsaṃhitā, ch. xiv.

Akhaṇḍa—Dildār-nagar, twelve miles south of Ghazipur.

Akshalinagara—See Anumakunḍapura.

Alaka—Same as Asmaka.

Alakānanda—A tributary of the Ganges,—the united stream of the Viṣṇugaṅgā (called Dhavala-Gaṅgā or Dhauli) and Sarasvatī-Gaṅgā; it is also called Bishengaṅgā above its confluence. The river has been traced by Captain Raper (Asia. Res., xi) a little way beyond Badrinath, having for its source a water-fall called Vasu-dhārā (Skanda P., Viṣṇu kh., III, 6). Śrinagar, the capital of Gaḥhwal, is situated on the bank of this river.

Ālambhika—See Alavi.

Alasanda—Alexandria, see Alexandria and Huplan. It is said to be the capital of Yona country (JASB., 1838, p. 166).

Alavi—Airwa, an ancient Buddhist town, the A-le of Fa Hien who travelled in India from A.D. 399 to 413, twenty-seven miles north-east of Itwah. Alavi has been identified by General Cunningham and Dr. Hoernle with Newal or Nawal—the Navadevakula of Huen Tsang, 19 miles south-east of Kanouj (Arch. S. Rep., I, 293; XI, 49; Udsaga-dado, app., p. 53). It was situated on the Ganges. According to Dr. Kern it was situated between Kośala and Magadha; it contained a monastery called Aggalava-chetiya (MIB., p. 37 n.). It is the Ālabhi of the Jāinas, from which Mahāvira made his missionary peregrinations (Rhys Davids' Vinaya Texts, Chullavagga, Vaṅgisa or Nigrodha Kappa Sutta, Pt. vi, ch. 17; Sutta Nipāta, Alavaka Sutta in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. X). It is the Ālambhika of the Kalpasūtra (Stevenson's Kalpasūtra, p. 91). Buddha passed his sixteenth vassa (Varsha) at this place. For the places where Buddha passed his vassas in different years after attaining Buddhahood, see JASB., 1838, p. 720.

Alexandria—1. Uchch, a town built by Alexander the Great near the confluence of the five rivers of the Punjab. 2. Hupian (see Hupian). 3. An island in the Indus, where, in a village called Kalasi, Menander, the Greek king, was born (SBE., XXXV, p. 127—the Questions of King Milinda). It was 200 yojanas from Śākala. 4. According to some authorities, Alexandria ad Caucasum of the Greeks is Beghrām, 25 miles north of Kabul, which contains the extensive ruins of an ancient town; and according to others it is Bamian (Gazetteer of the Countries adjacent to India under Beghrām).

Ali-madra—The district of Mardān (Hoti-Mardān) or in other words, the Yusufzai country to the north-east of Peshawar, containing many Buddhist and Græco-Bactrian remains (Brahmāṇḍa P., ch. 49).

Āmalakagrāma—See Āmalitāla.

Āmalitāla—On the north bank of the river Tāmraparṇī in Tinnevely, visited by Chaitanya. It is mentioned in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. It appears to be the same as Āmalakagrāma of the Nṛsiṃha Purāṇa, which has been highly extolled in Chapter 66; it is also called Sahya-Āmalakagrāma, being situated on the Western Ghats.

Amarakaṇṭaka—It is a part of the Mikul (Mekala) hills in Gondwana in the territory of Nagpur, in which the river Nerbuda and Sone have got their source (Padma Purāṇa, Svargakhaṇḍa (Ādi), ch. 6; Wilson's Meghdūta or the Cloud Messenger); hence the Nerbuda is called in the Amarakośha, the daughter of the Mekala mountain. It is the Āmrakūṭa of Kālidāsa's Meghadūta (I, 17). Its sanctity is described in the Skanda Purāṇa (Revā Khaṇḍa, ch. 21). The first fall of the Nerbuda from the Amaraṇṭaka mountain is called Kapiladhārā in the Skanda Purāṇa. Kapila is said to be an affluent of the Nerbudda (ch. 21). The Viṣṇu-saṃhitā (ch. 75) recommends Amaraṇṭaka and a few other places as being very efficacious for the performance of the Śrādh ceremony.

Amaranātha—A celebrated shrine of Śiva in a grotto in the Bhairavaghāṭi range of the Himalaya, about sixty miles from Islamabad, the ancient capital of Kāśmīra. The cave is situated at a considerable altitude on the west side of a snowy peak, 17,307 feet in height, locally called by the name of Kailāsa. A little stream known as Amargaṅgā, a tributary of the Indus, flows by the left side of the cave over a white soil with which the pilgrims besmear their body to cleanse away their sins, though no doubt it serves to keep off cold. The path to the cave lies along the side of the Amargaṅgā stream. The cave is naturally arched, 50 feet in breadth at the base and 25 feet in height. The Līṅga or phallic image is about 20 or 25 feet from the entrance and is at the inner extremity of the cave. The grotto is rightly said to be "full of wonderful congelations" (Bernier's Travels, p. 418 note), and according to Dr. Stein, the Liṅga which is an embodiment of Śiva Amareśvara is "a large block of transparent ice formed by the freezing of the water which oozes from the rock" (Dr. Stein's Rājatarāṅgiṇī, vol II, p. 409), which is evidently a dolomite rock. There is something very wonderful and curious about the formation of the Liṅga. The pedestal of the Liṅga is 7 or 8 feet in diameter and 2 feet in height. The Liṅga, which is 3 feet in height, rises from the centre of the pedestal with the figure of a serpent entwining it. The peculiarity of the entire formation is that it has got some connection with the moon, as it is gradually formed from day to day commencing after the day of the New Moon till it attains its full height on the day of the Full Moon: the process of forming and dissolving goes on every day, and on the day of the New Moon no sign of the image exists at all. On both sides of the Liṅga there are two columns of ice formation which are called Dents. Every year in the month of Śrāvāṇa, the pilgrims start from Mārttāṇḍa (Mārtan or Bhavan) for Amarnāth escorted by the officers of the Mahārāja of Kāśmīra (JASB., 1866, p. 219). On the last day of the visit, one or two or sometimes four pigeons are said to appear, gyrating and fluttering over the temple, to the amazed gaze of the pilgrims who regard them as Hara and Pārvatī.

Amarāvati—1. Nagarhāra, about two miles to the west of Jallalabad: a village close to it is still called Nagarak,—the Na-kie of Fa Hian. 2. The Amarāvati stūpa is about 18 miles to the west of Bezvada and south of Dharaṇikoṭa, on the south or right bank of the Kriṣṇa river about sixty miles from its mouth in the Kriṣṇa district, Madras Presidency. The Amarāvati Chaitya is the Pūrvāsaila Saṅghārāma of Hīnen Tsiang (Dr. Burgess' Buddhist Stupas of Amarāvati, p. 101). Amarāvati is the Diamond Sands (Dipal dinne) of the Daladā Vamā: it was situated in the kingdom of the Nāga Rāja (see Turnour's translation in JASB., vi., p. 856). The Amarāvati tope was built about A.D. 370 or 380, by the Andhras or the Andhra-bhṛitya kings who were Buddhists (Sewell's Sketch of the Dynasties of Southern India, p. 1; for its description see JRAS., III, 132).

Amareśvara—On the opposite side of Oṃkārnāth, on the southern bank of the river Nerbuda (Śiva Purāṇa, Pt. I, ch. 38; Skanda Purāṇa-Revākhaṇḍa), thirty-two miles north-west of Khandwa and eleven miles east of Martoka Railway station (Caine's Picturesque India, p. 397). In the Bṛhat-Śiva P. (Pt. II, chs. 3 and 4) Amareśvara is placed in Oṃkāra or Oṃkāra-kṣetra. The twelve great Liṅgas of Mahādeva are:—Somanātha in Saurāṣṭra, Mallikārjuna in Srisaṅga, Mahā-kāla in Ujjayinī, Oṃkāra in Amareśvara, Kedāra in the Himalayas, Bhīmaśaṅkara in Dākini, Viśveśvara in Benares, Tryambaka in Gomati (near Nasik), Vaidyanātha in Chitābhūmi, Nāgeśa in Dvārakā, Rāmeśvara in Setubandha, and Ghuśrīneśa in Sivālaya (Śiva Purāṇa, Pt. I, ch. 38).

Ambara—The country of Jaipur, so called from its ancient capital of that name now called Āmer, which is said to have been founded by Ambarisha, son of Māndhātā (Arch. S. Rep., Vol. 2), and hence Āmer is a corruption of Ambarishanagara. During the reign of Akbar, Man Singh made the Dilaram garden on the bank of the Tai Kautara Lake at the foot of the Amer palace or fort. Within the latter is the temple of the goddess called Jasareśwari Kālī taken away by Man Singh from Jessore after subjugating Pratāpāditya.

Ambashṭha—The country of the tribe of Ambutai of Ptolemy: they lived on the northern part of Sindh at the time of Alexander and also on the lower Akesines (McCrindle's Invasion of India by Alexander the Great, p. 155).

Amī—Eleven miles east of Chhapra containing the temple of Bhavānī, which is one of the 52 Pīṭhas, where a fragment from the body of Sati is said to have fallen. According to the Tantra-Chūdāmaṇi, the Pīṭhas where the dismembered limbs of Sati are said to have fallen, are 52. According to the Śivacharitra, they are 51; according to the Deś. Bhāgavata there are altogether 108 Pīṭhas (Pt. vii, ch. 30). The Upa-Pīṭhas or minor Pīṭhas are 26 (Kālikā-Purāṇa, chs. 18, 50, 61).

mrakōṭa-Parvata—It has been identified with Amarakaṇṭaka (Meghadūta and Mahāmahopādhyāya Haraprasād Śāstri's Meghadūta-Vyākhyā, p. 3).

Anahila-Pattana—Virawal-Pattana or Paṭṭana, called also Anihilwār in Northern Baroda in Gujarat, founded in Samvat 802 or A.D. 746, after the destruction of Valabhi by Banarāja or Vamśarāja. The town was called Anahilapattana after the name of a cowherd who pointed out the site (Merutuṅga Āchāryya's Prabandhachintāmaṇi, ch. 1; Merutuṅga's Therāvāṭi, ed. by Dr. Bhau Daji). Hemachandra, the celebrated Jaina grammarian and lexicographer, flourished in the Court of Kumārapāla, king of Anahilapattana (A.D. 1142–1173), and was his spiritual guide: he died at the age of 84 in A. D. 1172, in which year Kumārapāla became a convert to Jainism (Bhau Daji's Brief Notes on Hemachandra) but according to other authorities, the conversion took place in A.D. 1159 (Tawney's Intro., Prabandhachintāmaṇi, p. iii). After the overthrow of Valabhi in the eighth century, Anahilapattana became the chief city of Gujarat or Western India till the fifteenth century. For the kings of Anahilapattana, see R. C. Ghosh's Literary Remains of Dr. Bhau Daji, pp. 138 to 140; JRAS., XIII, p. 158. It was also called Anahillapura.

Anamala—Same as Anoma.

Anandapura—Vaḍnagar in northern Gujarat, seventy miles south-east of Sidhpur (St. Martin, as cited in McCrindle's Ptolemy), but there is still a place called Anandpur, fifty miles north-west of Valabhi. It was anciently called Anarittapura (see the two copper-plate inscriptions of Ālinā of A.D. 649 and 651). It was visited by Hiuen Tsiang (Burgess' Antiquities of Kathiawad-Kachh, p. 84). Anandapura or Vaḍnagar is also called Nagara which is the original home of the Nāgara Brāhmaṇas of Gujarat. Kumārapāla surrounded it with a rampart (Dr. Bühler, Ep. Indica, vol. 1, p. 295). Bhadrabāhu Svāmī, the author of the Kalpasūtra, composed in A.D. 411, flourished at the court of Dhruvasena II, king of Gujarat, whose capital was at this place (see Dr. Stevenson's Kalpasūtra: Preface).

It is also called Padmanābhapur (Prof. H. H. Wilson's Mackenzie Collection, p. 129). See Ananta-sayana.

ananta-sayana—Padmanābhapur, in Travancore, containing the celebrated temple of Viṣṇu sleeping on the serpent (Padma P., Uttara, ch. 74; Prof. H. H. Wilson's Mackenzie Collection, p. 129). See Ananta-Padmanābha.

anarta—1. Gujarat and part of Malwa: its capital was Kuśasthali or modern Dwārka (Bhāgavata P., ch. X., p. 67). 2. Northern Gujarat: its capital was Ānarttapura (Skanda P., Nāgara Kh., ch. 65), afterwards called Ānandapura, the modern Vāḍnagar (Bom. Gaz., vol. I., Pt. 1, p. 6, note 2).

Ānarttapura—Same as Ānandapura. See Ānarta.

Anavatapta—Same as Anotatta.

Andha—The river Andhilā or Chānden,—the Andomatis of Arrian: see Chandrāvati (Devī-Bhāgavata, Bk. 8, ch. 11).

Andhanada—The river Brahmaputra (Bhāgavata P., ch. 5, ślk. 9).

Andhra—1. The country between the Godāvarī and the Krishṇā including the district of Kistna. Its capital was Dhanakajaka or Amarāvati at the mouth of the Krishṇā. Veṅgi, five miles to the north of Ellur, was according to Hiuen Tsiang, its ancient capital (Garuḍa Purāṇa, ch. 55). 2. Telingana, south of Hyderabad. According to the Anargharāghava (Act vii, 103), the Sapta Godāvarī passes through the country of Andhra, and its principal deity is the Mahādeva Bhīmeśvara. The Pallava kings of Veṅgi were overthrown by the Chalukya kings of Kalyānapura, and succeeded by the Chola kings who, in their turn, were conquered by the Jaina kings of Dharaṇikoṭa. The Andhra dynasty was also called Sātavāhana or Sātakarṇi dynasty; their ancient capital was at Śrī Kākulum now diluviated by the Krishṇā.

Aṅga—The country about Bhagalpur including Mongyr. It was one of the sixteen political divisions of India (Āṅguttara I., 4; Vinaya Texts, ii, 146; Govinda Sutta in Dīgha-nikāya, xix, 36). Its capital was Champā or Champāpuri. The western limit of its northern boundary at one time was the junction of the Ganges and the Sarajā. It was the kingdom of Romapāda of the Rāmāyaṇa and Karna of the Mahābhārata. It is said in the Rāmāyaṇa that Madana, the god of love, was burnt to ashes by Mahādeva at this place, and hence the country is called Aṅga, Madana being thenceforth called Anaṅga (Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 23, vs. 13, 14). See Kama-asrama. According to Sir George Birdwood, Aṅga included also the districts of Birbhum and Murshidabad. According to some authorities, it also included the Santāl Parganas. It was annexed to Magadha by Bimbisāra in the sixth century B.C. (Spence Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, p. 166). His son Kunika or Ajātasatru became its viceroy, his head-quarters being at Champā. Mahana, the maternal grand-father of Kumaradevi, wife of king Govindachandra of Kanauj (1114-1151), was king Rāmapāla's viceroy in Aṅga (Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1908), the country having come under the sway of Gopāla, the founder of the Pāla dynasty, in the eighth century A.D. The celebrated places of antiquity and interest in the province of ancient Aṅga are:—Rishyaśṛṅga-āsrama at Rishikund, four miles to the south-west of Bariarpur, one of the stations of the East India Railway; the Karṇagad or the fort of Karṇa, four miles from Bhagalpur; Champā or Champāpuri, the ancient capital of Aṅga and the birth-place of Vāsudeva, the twelfth Tirthaṅkara of the Jaiṇas; Jahṇu-āśrama at Sultanganj; Modāgiri or Mongyr; the Buddhist caves at Pātharghāṭā (ancient Silā-saṅgama or Vikramaśilā-saṅghārāma) in the Kahalgāon sub-division, referred to by Hiuen Tsiang and by Chora Kavi in the Chora-pañchāśikā; and the Mandara Hill at Bansi, thirty-two miles to the south of Bhagalpur (see Champa-puri and Sumha). The name of Aṅga first appears in the Atharva-saṃhitā (Kāṇḍa V, Anuvāka 14). For the history of Aṅga, see my "Notes on Ancient Aṅga or the District of Bhagalpur" in JASB., 1914, p. 317.

Āṅgalaukika—The country of the Āṅgalaukikas who were most probably the Agalassians of Alexander's historians (see McCrindle's Invasion of India, p. 285) and neighbours of the Sivis, was situated below the junction of the Hydaspes and Akesines (Brahmaṇḍa, P. 149).

Añjana-Giri—The Suleiman range in the Panjab (Varāha P., ch. 80).

Anomā—The river Aumi, in the district of Gorakhpur (Cunningham's Ancient Geography of India, p. 423). It was crossed by Buddha after he left his father's palace at a place now called Chandauli on the eastern bank of the river, whence Chhandaka returned with Buddha's horse Kaṇṭhaka to Kapilāvastu (Śvaghosha's Buddha-Charita, Bk. V). But Carleyle identifies the river Anomā with the Kudawa Nadi in the Basti district of Oudh (Arch. S. Rep., vol. XXII, p. 224 and Führer's MAI.). Carleyle identifies the stūpa of Chhandaka's return with the Mahā-thān Dīh, four miles to the north-east of Tameswar or Maneya, and the Cut-Hair Stūpa with the Sirasara mound on the east bank of the Anomā river in the Gorakhpur district (Arch. S. Rep., Vol. XXII, pp. 11, 15).

Anotatta—It is generally supposed that Anotatta or Anavatapta lake is the same as Rāwan-hrad or Langa. But Spence Hardy considers it to be an imaginary lake (Beal's Legend and Theories of the Buddhists, p. 129).

Antaragiri—The Rājmaḥal hills in the district of Santal Pargana in the province of Bengal (Matsya P., ch. 113, v. 44; Pargiter's Mārkaṇḍeya P., p. 325, note).

Antaraveda—The Doab between the Ganges and the Yamunā (Hemakośha; Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pt. III, ch. 2; Ep. Ind., p. 197).

Anumakunḍapattana—Same as Anumakunḍapura.

Anumakunḍapura—Warrangal, the ancient capital of Telingana (Rudradeva inscription in JASB., 1838, p. 903, but see Prof. Wilson's Mackenzie Collection, p. 76). It was the capital of Rājā Rudradeva identified with Churang or Choragaigā. The town was also called Anumakunḍapattana (JASB., 1838, p. 901). The Kākatīyas reigned here from A.D. 1110 to 1323. According to General Cunningham, Warrangal is the Korunkola of Ptolemy's Geography. Another name of Warrangal, according to the same authority, is Akshalinagara, which in the opinion of Mr. Cousens is the same as Yeksilanagara (List of the Antiquarian Remains in the Nizam's Territories). See Benakataka.

Anupadesa—South Malwa. The country on the Nerbuda about Nimar. Same as Haibaya, Mahisha and Mahishaka (Śiva Purāṇa, Dharma-saṃhitā, ch. 56; Harivamśa, chs. 5, 33, 112, 114). Its capital was Māhishmati (Raghuvamśa, canto VI, v. 43).

Anurâdhapura—The ancient capital of Ceylon. The branch of the celebrated Bo-tree (Pipal-tree) of Buddha-Gayâ was brought and planted here by Mahinda and his sister Saṅghamittâ, who were sent by their father Aśoka to introduce Buddhism into Ceylon. The tree still exists in the Mahâ-vihâra. The left canine tooth of Buddha which was removed from Dantapura (Puri) in the fourth century to Anurâdhapura, existed in a building erected on one of the angles of Thuparamaye (Thupârâma) Dagoba (a corruption of Dhâtugarbha), which was built by Devânâmpiyatissa about 230 B.C., as a relic shrine of either the right jaw-bone or the right collar-bone of Buddha. See Dantapura. The town contains also the "Loya Maha Paya" or Great Brazen Monastery and the "Ruanwelli" Dagoba described in the Mahāvamāsa. The latter was built by the king Duṭṭhagâmini in the second century of the Christian era. The Isibhumanganan was the site of Mahinda's funeral pile, and in the Ghanṭâkara-vihâra the Aṭṭha-kathā (the commentary of the Tripitaka) was translated from Singhalese into Pâli by Buddhaghosha (A.D. 410—432), a Brahmin who came from a village named Ghosha in the neighbourhood of Buddha-Gayâ, during the reign of Mahânâma or Mahâmuni (Gray's Buddhaghosupatti): he was converted into Buddhism by Revata (Turnour's Mahāvamāsa, ch. 37).

Aornos—Ranigat, sixteen miles north-west of Ohind in the Peshawar district of the Panjab (Cunningham's Ancient Geography of India, p. 58), but according to Captain James Abbot; Shah Kote on Mount Mahaban, situated on the western bank of the Indus, about 70 miles to the north-east of Peshawar: modern researches have proved the correctness of Abbot's identification (Smith's Early History of India, p. 68). It is perhaps a corruption of Varāṇa of Pāṇini: there is still a town called Barana (q.v.) on the western bank of the Indus opposite to Attok (Ind. Ant., I, 22).

Apaga—Afghanistan (Brahmaṇḍa P., ch. 49).

Āpaga—1. The Ayuk-nadi to the west of the Ravi in the Panjab. 2. A river in Kurukshetra (Vāmana P., ch. 36, Padma P., Svarga; ch. 12). See, however, Oghavati. It still bears its ancient name. It is evidently the Āpayâ of the Rig-Veda (III, 23, 4) frequently mentioned with the Sarasvatī and the Drishadvati.

Āpāpauri—Same as Pāpā [Śabdakalpadruma—s.v. Tīrthahkara; Prof. Wilson's Hindu Religion (Life of Mahāvira)]. See Pāpā.

Aparanandā—Same as Alakānandā: see Nandī (Mahābh., Vana, ch. 109; Brahmaṇḍa P., ch. 43).

Aparānta—Same as Aparāntaka.

Aparāntaka—Koṅkan and Malabar (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, ch. 58): it is the Ariake of Ptolemy, according to whom it extended southward from the Nerbuda. In the Raghuvamāsa (IV, v. 53) Aparānta is said to be on the south of the Muralâ. According to the Periplus of the Erythraean Sea, Ariake extended southwards from the gulf of Cambay to the north of Ābhīra. Ptolemy's Ariake is the contraction of Aparāntaka, but that of the Periplus is the contraction of Āraṇyaka. According to Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, Aparānta was the northern Koṅkan, the capital of which was Surpâraka (modern Supara) near Bassein. Aśoka sent here a Buddhist missionary named Yona-Dhammarakkhita in 245 B.C. According to Bhagvanlal Indraji, the western seaboard of India was called Aparāntika or Aparāntaka (Ind. Ant., vol. VII, pp. 259, 263). Bhaṭṭa Svāmī in his commentary on Kauṣilya's Arthśāstra (Koshādhyaksha, Bk. ii) identifies it with Koṅkana.

See also Brahma Purāṇa (ch. 27, vol. 58) which includes Surpāraka in Aparānta-deśa. According to Kālidāsa, it was situated between the Sahya (Western Ghats) and the sea (Raghuvamśa). It extended from the river Mahi to Goa (Bomb. Gaz., vol. I, Pt. I, p. 36, note 8).

Āraba—Arabia. See Banāyu.

Ārāmanagara—Arrah in the district of Shahabad. Dr. Hoey, however, supposes that the ancient name of Arrah was Arāda; and Arāda Kālāma, the teacher of Buddha, was a native of this place (JASB., vol. LXIX, p. 77), but see Arch. S. Rep., vol. III, p. 70.

Āraṇya—1. The nine sacred Āraṇyas or forests are:—Saindhava, Daṇḍakāraṇya, Naimisha, Kurujāṅgala, Upalāvṛita (Utpalāraṇya ?), Āraṇya, Jambumārga, Pushkara, and Himālaya (Devi Purāṇa, ch. 74). 2. See Āraṇyaka. 3. Same as Bana.

Āraṇyaka—A kingdom situated on the south of Ujjain and Vidarbha (Mahābhārata, Sabhā, ch. 31). It is called Āraṇya in the Devi Purāṇa, ch. 46. It is the Ariaka of the Periplus. According to DaCunha, Ariaka (Ārya-kshetra) comprised a great part of Aurangabad and southern Koṅkana. Its capital was Tagara, modern Doulatabad (DaCunha's History of Chaul and Bassein, p. 127).

The Nāga king of Aravālo was converted into Buddhism by Majjhantika (Madhyantika), the missionary, who was sent by Aśoka to Kāśmīra and Gāndhāra. It is the largest lake in the valley of Kāśmīra, and produces water-nuts (siṅgādā) in abundance, supporting considerable portion of the population, the nuts being the roots of the plant trapa bispinosa (Thornton's Gazetteer).

Arbuda—Mount Abu in the Aravali range in the Siroh State of Rajputana. It was the hermitage of Rishi Vasiṣṭha (Mbh., Vana, ch. 82; Padma P., Svarga, ch. 11). The Rishi is said to have created out of his fire-pit in the mountain a hero named Paramāra to oppose Viśvāmitra while he was carrying away his celebrated cow Kāma-dhenu. Paramāra became the progenitor of the Paramāra clan of Rajputs (Ep. Ind., vol. I, p. 224). Mount Abu contains the celebrated shrine of Ambā Bhavānī. It contains the celebrated Jaina temples dedicated to Rishabha Deva and Neminātha: it is one of the five sacred hills of the Jāinas, which are Satruṇjaya, Samet Sikhar, Arbuda, Gīrnar, Chandragiri (Ind. Ant., II, 354). For the names of the twenty-four Tirthaṅkaras, see Śrāvastī.

Ariana—That portion of Central Asia (mentioned by Strabo) which was the original abode of the Aryan race and which is called Airyan-vejo (Ārya-vija) in the Avesta. From its description as a very cold country and its situation on the north of India as it appears from the Vedas, it is considered to have been situated to the west of Belurtagh and Mustagh (or Snowy Mountain) and near the source of the Amu and Syhun, including the Pamir. Sections of the Aryan race migrated to the west and settled themselves in Europe at different periods. Those that remained behind migrated subsequently to the south and settled themselves in Iran and the Punjab. Differences of opinion about agricultural and religious reforms, especially the introduction of the worship of Indra as a principal god to the lowering of Varuṇa, who always held the highest position in the hierarchy of the gods even from the time when they all resided in Central Asia, split up the early Aryan settlers of the Punjab into two parties, and led to the dissension which brought about a permanent separation between them. The party which opposed this innovation migrated to the north-west, and after residing for some time at Balkh and other places, finally settled themselves in Iran: they were the followers of Zarathasthura and were called Zoroastrians, the ancestors of the modern Parsis. The other party, the ancestors of the Hindus, gradually spread their dominion from the Punjab and the bank of the Sarasvatī to the east and south by their conquest of the aboriginal races (Max Müller's Science of Language).

Arishtapura—The Sanskritized form of Aṛiṭhapura, the capital of the country of Bīvi (q.v.). It has not yet been identified: perhaps it is the same as Aristobathra of Ptolemy on the north of the Punjab.

See Kālakavana. According to Rājasekhara, the river Nerbude was the boundary between Āryāvarṭta and Dakṣiṇāpatha (Bālarāmdyaṇa, Act VI; Apte's Rājasekhara: his Life and Writings, p. 21).

Auxoamis which has been identified by Saint Martin with Sumi (McCrindle's Ptolemy) lying a little to the east of the Sarasvatī and at a distance of about 25 miles from the sea, was considered to be the ancient Āsmaka. According to Prof. Rhys Davids, Āsmaka was the Assaka of the Buddhist period, and was situated immediately to the north-west of Avanti. The Assakas had a settlement on the banks of the Godāvar at the time of Buddha, and their capital was Potana (Govinda Sūtra in Digha- Nikāya, xix, 36). It appears, however, from the "History of Bāwari" in Spence Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, Suttanipāta, and Pārāyanavagga (SBE., X, 188) that Assaka (Aśmaka) was situated between the Godāvari and Māhissati (Māhishmati) on the Nerbuda. It was also called Alaka or Mūlaka and its capital was Pratishthāna (Paudanya (q.v.) of the Mahābhārata) on the north bank of the Godāvari (see Pratishthāna,) called Potali and Potana by the Buddhists (Jātakas, Cam. Ed., vol. III, p. 2). It became a part of the Mahārāshtra country at the time of Aśoka. The Daśakumāracharita written in the sixth century A.D., by Daḍḍin, describes it as a dependant kingdom of Vidarbha. It is also mentioned in the Harshacharita. It should be remarked that in the Purāṇas, Mūlaka is said to be the son of a king of Aśmaka. Bhaṭṭa Swāmi, the commentator of Kauṭilya's Arthśāstra, identifies Aśmaka with Mahārāshtra. It is the Aśvaka of the Mahābhārata (Bhishma P., ch. 9).

Asmanvati—The river Oxus. It is mentioned in the Rig-Veda, x, 53, 8.

Assaka—See Aśmaka (Digha Nikāya, xix, 36).

The district of Nurpur (or rather Gurudāspur) which was anciently called Dahmeri or Dehmbeori, the capital of which is Pathankot (Pratishthāna) on the Ravi in the Punjab, was also called Udumvara (Bṛihat-Saṃhitā, ch. 14 and Arch. S. Rep., vol. xiv, p. 116; Rapson's Ancient India, p. 155). There was another Udumbara to the east of Kanouj (Chullavagga, pt. xii, chs. 1 and 2).

In the Govinda Sūtra (Digha-Nikāya, xix, 36), its capital is said to be Māhishmati. It is the ancient name of Malwa (Kathāsarit-sāgara, ch. xix). Avanti has been called Mālava since the seventh or eighth century A.D. (Rhys Davids' Buddhist India, p. 28).

It was formerly a renowned city referred to by the historians of Alexander the Great. The town is built on a hillock 40 or 50 feet above the surrounding plain. Its old walls and bastions are now crumbling into ruins. It is celebrated for the tomb of the Mahomedan Saint Farid-ud-din Shaheb Shaker Ganj.

Ayodhyā—Oudh, the kingdom of Rāma. At the time of the Rāmāyana (I, chs. 49, 50,) the southern boundary of Kośala was the river Syandikā or Sai between the Gumti and the Ganges. During the Buddhist period, Ayodhyā was divided into Uttara (Northern) Kośala and Dakshiṇa (Southern) Kośala. The river Sarayū divided the two provinces. The capital of the former was Śrāvastī on the Rapti, and that of the latter was Ayodhyā on the Sarayū. At the time of Buddha, the kingdom of Kośala under Prasenajit's father Mahākośala extended from the Himalayas to the Ganges and from the Rāmgangā to the Gandak. The ancient capital of the kingdom was also called Ayodhyā, the birth-place of Rāmachandra. At a place in the town called Janmasthanā he was born; at Chirodaka, called also Chirasāgara, Daśaratha performed the sacrifice for obtaining a son with the help of Rishyasṅga Rishi; at a place called Tretā-ki-Thākur, Rāmachandra performed the horse-sacrifice by setting up the image of Sitā; at Ratnamaṇḍapa, he held his council (Muktikopaniṣad, ch. 1); at Swargadwāram in Fyzabad, his body was burned. At Lakshmaṇa-kuṇḍa, Lakshmaṇa disappeared in the river Sarayū. Daśaratha accidentally killed Saravaṇa, the blind Rishi's son, at Majhaurā in the district of Fyzabad. Ādinātha, a Jaina Tirthaṅkara, was born at Ayodhyā (Führer's MAI). Cunningham has identified the Sugrīva Parvata with the Kālakārāma or Purvārāma monastery of the Mahāvamśa, the Maṇi Parvata with Aśoka's Stūpa mentioned by Hiuen Tsiang, the Kubera Parvata with the Stūpa containing the hair and nails of Buddha (Arch. S. Rep., vol. i). The Maṇi Parvata is said to be a fragment of the Gandhamādana mountain which Hanumān carried on his head on his way to Lākā. The sacred places at Ayodhyā were restored by Vikramāditya (evidently a Gupta king), who was an adherent of the Brahmanical faith, in the second century A.D., or according to some, in the fifth century A.D., as the sacred places at Brindāban were restored by Rūpa and Sanātana in the sixteenth century A.D. Ayodhyā is the Sāketa of the Buddhists and Sagada of Ptolemy (see Sāketa).

Ayudha—The country lying between the Vitastā (Jhelum) and the Sindhū (Indus). Same as Yaudheya.

The names of the eight Tirthas are:—Panya, Śānta, Śaṅkara, Rāja, Chintāmaṇi, Pramodā, Śatalakṣhaṇa, and Jayā. The source and exit of the Bāghmatī are two other Tirthas. Same as Bhāgvatī.

Badarī—The O-cha-li of Hiuen Tsiang. It has been identified by Cunningham (Anc. Geo., p. 494) with Edar in the province of Gujarāt; it was, according to him, Sauvira of the Pauranic period. According to the Bṛihat-jyotiśhārṇava, Edar is a corruption of Ilva-durga. It is situated on a river called Hiranyanadī. The name of Badarī is mentioned in the Dhavala inscription at Vasantagad near Mount Abu (JASB., 1841, p. 821).

Badarī—See Badarikārama.

Badarikārama—Badrināth in Garwal, United Provinces. It is a peak of the main Himalayan range, about a month's journey to the north of Hardwar and 55 miles north-east of Śrīnagara. The temple of Nara-Nārāyaṇa is built on the west bank near the source of the Bishengāgā (Alakānanda), equidistant from two mountains called Nara and Nārāyaṇa, over the site of a hot-spring called Tapanakuṇḍa, the existence of which, no doubt, led to the original selection of this spot: it is situated on the Gandhamādana mountain (Asiatic Researches, vol. XI, article x; Mahābhārata, Śānti, ch. 335). The temple is said to have been built by Śaṅkarāchārya in the eighth century A.D. It was also called Badarī and Bisālā Badarī (Mahābhārata, Vana, ch. 144). For a description of the place, see Asiatic Researches, vol. XI, article x.

The river is also called Bāchmatī as it was created by the Buddha Krakuchhanda by word of mouth when he visited Nepāla with people from Gauda-deśa. Its junctions with the rivers Maradārikā, Maṇi-rohinī, Rājamañjarī, Ratnāvalī, Chārumatī, Prabhāvatī and Triveṇī, form the Tirthas called Śānta, Śaṅkara, Rājamañjarī, Pramodā, Sulakṣhaṇa, Jayā and Gokarṇa respectively (Svayambhu Purāṇa, ch. v; Varāha P., ch. 215. See also Wright's Hist. of Nepal, p. 90).

Bāhika—The country between the Bias and the Sutlej, north of Kekaya. It is another name for Vāhika (see Mbh., Sabhā, ch. 27, where Vālheka is evidently used for Vāhika): it was conquered by Arjuna. According to the Mahābhārata (Karna P., ch. 44), the Vāhikas lived generally between the Sutlej and the Indus, but specially on the west of the rivers Ravi and Āpagā (Ayuk Nadi), and their capital was Śākala. They were a non-Aryan race and perhaps came from Balkh, the capital of Bactria. According to Pāṇini and Patañjali, Vāhika was another name for the Panjab (IV, 2, 117; V, 3, 114; Ind. Ant. I, 122). See Takka-deśa. Bāhi and Hika were names of two Asuras of the Bias river after whom the country was called Vāhika. (Mbh., Karna P., ch. 45 and Arch. S. Rep., vol. V). They lived by robbery. According to the Rāmāyaṇa (Ayodhyā K., ch. 78), Vāhika was situated between Ayodhyā and Kekaya.

Bāhuda—The river Dhabalā now called Dhumela or Burha-Rapti, a feeder of the Rapti in Oudh. The severed arm of Rishi Likhita was restored by bathing in this river; hence the river is called Bāhuda (Mahābhārata, Śānti, ch. 22; Harivaṃśa, ch. 12). But in the Śiva Purāṇa (Pt. VI, ch. 60), it is said that Gauri, the grandmother of Māndhātā, was turned into the river Bābudā by the curse of her husband Prasūrajit. It has been identified by Mr. Pargiter with the Rāngaṅgā which joins the Ganges near Kanauj (see his Mārkaṇḍeya P., ch. 57). See Ikshumati. But this identification does not appear to be correct, as it is a river of Eastern India (Mahābhārata, Vana, ch. 87).

Bahulā—A Śakti Pīṭha near Kātwa in Bengal (Tantrachudāmaṇi).

Baibhrajā-Sarovara—Same as Manasa-sarovara (Harivaṃśa, ch. 23).

It has been identified by Yule (Marco-Polo) with the northern section of the Western Ghats. The Parvata or mountain is situated in Gujarāt near the source of the river Viśvāmītrā which flows by the side of Bareda (Varāhamihira's Bṛihat-Saṃhitā, ch. 14; Mahābhārata, Vana, chs. 89, 120). 3. [Temples of Baidyanātha are:—In Deogaḍh in the Sonthal Perganas in Bengal (Bṛihad-Dharma P., pt. 1, ch. 14). See Chitabhūmi. For the establishment of the god and the name of Baijnāth (Vaidyanātha), see Mr. Bradley-Birt's Story of an Indian Upland, ch. xi. 2. In Dabhoi, Gujarat (Ep. Ind., vol. 1, p. 21). 3. In Kiragrāma on the east of the Kangra district, 30 miles east of Kot Kangra on the Binuan river (ancient Kandukā-binduka) in the Panjab (Ep. Ind., vol. 1, p. 97)].

Baidyuta-Parvata—A part of the Kailāsa range at the foot of which the Mānasa-sarovara lake is situated. It is evidently the Gurla range on the south of lake Mānasa-sarovara; the Saraju is said to rise from this mountain (Brahmāṇḍa P., ch. 51). As Mānasa-sarovara is situated in the Kailāsa mountain (Rāmāyana, Bāla-k., ch. 24), Baidyuta mountain is a part of the Kailāsa range.

Bairāta-Pattana—The capital of the old kingdom of Govisana, visited by Hiuen Tsiang in the seventh century. It has been identified with Dhikuli in the district of Kumaun (Führer's MAI., p. 49).

Baisālī — Besād in the district of Mazaffarpur (Tirhut), eighteen miles north of Hājipur, on the left bank of the Gaṇḍak (General Cunningham's Anc. Geo., p. 443 and Rāmāyaṇa, Ādikāṇḍa, ch. 47). The Rāmāyaṇa places Bisālā on the northern bank of the Ganges and the Ava. Kalp. (ch. 39) on the river Balgumati. The Pergana Besārā, which is evidently a corruption of Bisālā, is situated within the sub-division of Hājipur. Baisālī was the name of the country as well as of the capital of the Vrijjis (Vajjis) or Licchhavis who flourished at the time of Buddha. The southern portion of the district of Muzaffarpur constituted the ancient country of Vaisālī. The small kingdom of Vaisālī was bounded on the north by Videha and on the south by Magadha (Pargiter's Ancient Countries in Eastern India). It appears from the Lalitavistara that the people of Vaisālī and the Vajjis had a republican form of government (see also Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta). Buddha lived in the Mahāvana (Great Forest) monastery called Kuṭāgārasālā or Kuṭāgāra hall, rendered as "Gabled Pavilion" by Rhys Davids (Chullavagga, ch. v, sec. 13 and ch. x, sec. 1; SBE., vol. XI), which was situated on the Markaṭa-hrada or monkey-tank near the present village of Bakhra, about two miles north of Besād, and near it was the tower called Kuṭāgāra (double-storeyed) built over half the body of Ānanda. About a mile to the south of Besād was the Mango-garden presented to Buddha by the courtesan Āmradārikā called also Ambapālī. Chāpāla was about a mile to the north-west of Besād, where Buddha hinted to Ānanda that he could live in the world as long as Ānanda liked, but the latter did not ask him to live. The town of Baisālī, which was the capital of Videha at the time of Buddha and Mahāvira, consisted of three districts: Baisālī or Besālī proper, Kuṇḍapura or Kuṇḍagāma (the birth-place of Mahāvira, the twenty-fourth or last Tīrthāṅkara of the Jinas), and Bāniyagāma, occupying respectively the south-eastern, north-eastern, and western portions of the city (Dr. Hoernle's Uvasagadasao, p. 4 n.; Āchārādāga Sūtra, and Kalpa Sūtra in SBE., vol. XXII, p. 227 f.). The second Buddhist Synod was held at the Bālukārāma-vihāra in 443 B.C., but according to Max Müller in 377 B.C., in the reign of Kālāsoka, king of Magadha, under the presidentship of Revata who was one of the disciples of Ānanda (Turnour's Mahavaṅśa, ch. iv). Baisālī, however, has been identified by Dr. Hoey with Chidānd, seven miles to the east of Chapra on the Ganges (see Chidānd in Pt. II). At Beluva (modern Belwa, north-east of Chidānd), Buddha was seized with serious illness (Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta, ch. ii). Chāpāla (Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta, ch. ii) has been identified by Dr. Hoey with Telpā (or Talpā, a tower) to the east of the town of Chapra, which was built for the Mother of the Thousand Sons. Titariā, west of Sewan, has been identified by him with the forest, the fire of which was extinguished by the Tilar or partridge. The name of Satnarnālā has been connected with the seven (sapta) princes who were prepared to fight with the Mallas for the relics of Buddha. Bhāta-pokhar (Bhakta-Pushkara) is shown to be the place where Droṇa divided the relics among the seven princes. The country to the east of the river Dahan near Sewan was the country of the Mallas. The river Shi-lai-na-fa-ti (Suvārṇavatī) of Hiuen Tsiang has been identified with the river Sonḍī. Dr. Hoey identifies Besād with the town of the Monster Fish, Vasāṭhya (really porpoise) [JASB., vol. LXIX—"Identification of Kusinara, Vaisali and other Places" and my article on "Chidān in the district of Saran" in JASB., vol. LXXII. The places where Buddha resided while in Vaisālī are Udena-Mandira, Gautama-Mandira, Saptambaka-Mandira, Bahuputraka-Mandira, Saranda-Mandira, and Chāpāla-Mandira (Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta, ch. 3; Spence Hardy's MB., p. 343). For the names of other places in Baisālī where Buddha resided, see Divyavadāna (Cowell's ed., chs. xi, xii).

Baisikiya—Same as Baśyā (Brahma P., ch. 27).

Baitaraṇī—1. The river Baitaraṇī in Orissa: it is mentioned in the Mahābhārata as being situated in Kaliṅga (Vana Parva, ch. 113). Jājjpur stands on this river. 2. The river Dantura which rises near Nasik and is on the north of Bassein. This sacred river was brought down to the earth by Paraśurāma (Padma P., Tuṅgārī Māhātmya; Matsya P., ch. 113; Da Cunha's History of Chaul and Bassein, pp. 117, 122). 3. A river in Kurukshetra (Mbh., Vana, ch. 83). 4. A river in Garwal on the road between Kedāra and Badrinātha, on which the temple of Gopeśvara Mahādeva is situated.

Bākāṭaka—A province between the Bay of Bengal and the Śrī-saila hills, south of Hyderabad in the Deccan. The Kailakila Yavanas reigned in this province and Vindhyāśakti was the founder of this dynasty (Vishnu P., IV., ch. 24; Dr. Bhau Daji's Brief Survey of Indian Chronology). See, however, Kilkila.

Bakreśvara—Bakranāth, one of the Śakti Pīṭhas in the district of Birbhum in Bengal. It derives its name from Bhairava Bakranath, the name of the goddess being Mahishamarddini. There are seven springs of hot and cold water (Tantra-chudāmaṇi).

Bakreśvari—The river Bākā which flows through the district of Burdwan in Bengal.

Bakshu—The river Oxus (Matsya P., ch. 101; cf. Chakshu in Brahmaṇḍa P., ch. 51; see Sabdakalpadruma s.v. Nadi) Wuksh, the archetype of Oxus, is at a short distance from the river (Ibn Huakul's Account of Khorasan in JASB., XXII, p. 176).

Balabhi—Wala or Wallay, a seaport on the western shore of the gulf of Cambay, in Kathiawad Gujarat, 18 miles north-west of Bhaonagar (Daśakumāra-charita, ch. vi; JRAS., vol. XIII (1852), p. 146; and Cunningham's Anc. Geo., p. 316). It is called Vamilapura by the inhabitants. It became the capital of Saurāṣṭra or Gujarat. It contained 84 Jaina temples (JRAS., XIII, 159), and afterwards became the seat of Buddhist learning in Western India in the seventh century A.D., as Nālandā in Eastern India (Itsing's Record of the Buddhist Religion by Takakusu, p. 177). The Valabhi dynasty from Bhaṭārka to Śilāditya VII reigned from cir. A.D. 465 to 766. For the names of kings of the Valabhi dynasty, see Dr. Bhau Daji's Literary Remains, p. 113; JASB., 1838, p. 966 and Kielhorn, "List of Inscts. of N. India," Ep. Ind., Vol. VIII, App. Bhartṛihari, the celebrated author of Bhaṭṭi-Kāvya, flourished in the court of Śridharasena I, king of Valabhi, in the seventh century. Bhadrabāhu, the author of the Kalpasūtra, flourished in the court of Dhruva Sena II (see Dr. Stevenson's Kalpasūtra: Preface). See Anandapura.

Bāhika—1. The country between the Bias and the Sutlej, north of Kekaya (Rāmāyaṇa Ayodhyā, ch. 78). The Trikāṇḍa-śeṣa mentions that Vālhika and Trigarta were the names of the same country (see Trigarta). The Mahābhārata (Kāṇḍa Parva, ch. 44) says that the Vālhikas lived on the west of the Ravi and Āpagā rivers, i.e. in the district of Jhang (see Bāhika). The Madras whose capital was Śākala (Sangala of the Greeks), were also called Vāhikas. Bāhika is the corrupted form of this name. The inscription on the Delhi Iron Pillar mentions the Vālhikas of Sindhu (JASB., 1838, p. 630). See Bāhika. 2. Balkh—the Bactriana of the Greeks—situated in Turkestan [Bṛihat saṃhitā, ch. 18 and JASB., (1838) p. 630]. About 250 B.C. Theodotus, or Diodotus, as he was called, the governor of Bactria, revolted against the Seleucid sovereign Antiochus Theos and declared himself king. The Græco-Bactrian dominion was overwhelmed entirely about 126 B.C. by the Yue-chi, a tribe of the Tartars (see Śākadvīpa). Balkh was the capital of Bactria comprising modern Kabul, Khurasan, and Bukhara (James Prinsep's Indian Antiquities, vol. I). The palaces of Bactria were celebrated for their magnificence. Zoroaster lived at Bactria in the reign of Vitasa or Gustasp, a king of the Bactrian dynasty of Kāvja, between the sixth and tenth centuries B.C. According to Mr. Kunte, Zarathasthura (Zoroaster) is a corruption of Zarat Tvastri or "Praiser of Tvastri," Tvastri being the chiseller and architect of the gods (Kunte's Vicissitudes of Aryan Civilization in India, p. 55). From the Brahma Purāṇa (chs. 89 and 132), Tvaṣṭā and Viśvakarmā (the architect of the gods) appear to be identical, as well as their daughters Ushā and Saṃjñā, the wife of the Sun. A few heaps of earth are pointed to as the site of ancient Bactria. It is called Um-ul-Bilad or the mother of cities and also Kubbet-ul-Islam (i.e. dome of Islam). It contained a celebrated fire-temple. For the history of the Bactrian kings, and the Græco-Bactrian alphabet, see JASB., IX (1840), pp. 449, 627, 733; for Bactrian coins, see JASB., X. (1842), p. 130.

Ballālapuri—The capital of Ādiśūra and Ballāla Sena, kings of Bengal, now called Rāmpāla or Ballālabādī, about four miles to the west of Munshiganj at Bikramapura (q.v. in the district of Dacca. The Sena Rājās, according to General Cunningham (Arch. S. Rep.) retired to this place after the occupation of Gaur by the Mahomedans (Arch. S. Rep., vol. III, p. 163). The remains of Ballāla Sena's fort still exist at this place. It is said to have been founded by Rājā Rāma Pāla of the Pāla dynasty, and a large tank in front of the fort still bears his name. He was the son of Vighrahapāla III and father of Madana-pāla. The five Brahmins who came to Bengal from Kanauj at the request of Ādiśūra, are said to have vivified a dead post by the side of the gateway of the fort into a Gajāria tree, which still exists, by placing upon it the flowers with which they had intended to bless the king. It should be here observed that Ādiśūra Jayanta or Ādiśūra, who ascended the throne of Gour in A.D. 732, caused the five Brahmins to be brought from Kanauj for performing a Putreshtī sacrifice, and he gave them five villages to live in, namely, Pañchakoṭi, Harikoṭi, Kāmakoṭi, Kaṅkagrāma and Baṣagrāma, now perhaps collectively called Pañchasāra, about a mile from Rāmpāla. Ballāla's father Vijayasena conquered Bengal and ascended the throne of Gaur in A.D. 1072. Ballāla Sena, who ascended the throne in A.D. 1119, is said to have been the last king of this place. His queens and other members of his family died on the funeral pyre (the spot is still pointed out in the fort,) by the accidental flying of a pair of pigeons carrying the news of his defeat at the moment of his victory over the Yavana chief Bāyādumba of Manipur, the Bābā Ādam of local tradition, who had invaded the town of Bikramapura or as it was called Ballālapuri, at the instigation of Dharma Giri, the mahanta of the celebrated Mahādeva called Ugramādhava of Mahāsthāna, whom the king had insulted and banished from his kingdom (Ānanda Bhaṭṭa's Ballāla-Charita, chs. 26 and 27). Bāyādumba or Bābā Ādam's tomb is half a mile to the north of Ballāla-bādi. Vikramapura was the birth-place of Dipaṅkara Śrī Jñāna, the great reformer of Lamaism in Tibet, where he went in A.D. 1038, and was known by the name Atiśa. Rāmpāla was also the capital of the Chandra and Varma lines of kings.

Bālm[ki]-Āsrama—Bithur, fourteen miles from Cawnpur, which was the hermitage of Rishi Vālmiki, the author of the Rāmāyaṇa. Sītā, the wife of Rāmachandra, lived at the hermitage during her exile, where she gave birth to the twin sons, Lava and Kuśa. The temple erected in honour of Vālmiki at the hermitage is situated on the bank of the Ganges (Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara, ch. 58). Sītā is said to have been landed by Lakshmaṇa, while conveying her to the hermitage, at the Satī-ghāt in Cawnpur. A large heavy metallic spear or arrow-head of a greenish colour is shown in a neighbouring temple close to the Brahmāvartta-ghāt at Bithur, also situated on the bank of the Ganges, as the identical arrow with which Lava wounded his father, Rāmachandra, in a fight for the Aivamedha horse; this arrow-head is said to have been discovered a few years ago in the bed of the river Ganges in front of the hermitage.

Baloksha—Beluchistan. The name occurs only in the 57th chapter of the Avadāna-Kalpalatā. From the names of other places and that of Milindra, perhaps the Greek king Menander, mentioned in that chapter, Bāloksha appears to be the country of the "Balokshias" or Beluchis. It is called Balokshi in the Bodhisattvāvadāna-Kalpasūtra (Dr. R. Mitra's Sans. Buddh. Literature of Nepal, p. 60). Beluchistan was formerly a Hindu kingdom and its capital Kelat or Kalat (which means fort) was originally the abode of a Hindu ruler named Sewāmal, after whom the fort there was called Kalat-i-Sewa, now known by the name of Kalat-wa-Neecharah. One of the most ancient places in Beluchistan is the island called Sata-dvīpa (popularly known as Suūga-dvīpa) or the island of Sata or Astola (Astula or Kālī), the Asthala of Ptolemy and Satalishefalo of Hiuen Tsiang (Astuleśvara), just opposite the port of Pasānee (Pāshāni) which is evidently the Pāshān of Bodhisattvāvadāna-Kalpasūtra. According to tradition, it was once inhabited, but the inhabitants were expelled by the presiding goddess Kālī in her wrath at an incest that was committed there. Sata-dvīpa is the Karmine of Nearchus, which is a corruption of Kālyana or the abode of Kālī. There is still a Hindu temple at Kalat, which is dedicated to Kālī or Durgā, and which is believed to have been in existence long before the time of Sewa. Another place of Hindu antiquity in Beluchistan is the temple of Hingulaj (see Hingulā). Mustang also contains a temple of Mahādeva (JASB., 1843, p. 473—"Brief History of Kalat" by Major Robert Leech).

Balubāhīnī—The river Bāgin in Bundelkhand, a tributary of the Jamuna [Skanda P., Āvāntya Kh. (Revā Kh., ch. 4)].

Bamanasthali—Banthali near Junāgaḍ.

Bamri—Same as Bāveru.

Baṃka—Same as Batsya : (Jātakas, VI, 120).

Baṃsadhārā—The river Baṃsadhārā in Ganjam, on which Kaliṅgapatam is situated (Pargiter's Mārkand. P., ch. 57, p. 305; Imperial Gazetteer of India, s.v. Ganjam and Vāṃsadhārā).

Baṃsagulma—A sacred reservoir (kuṇḍa) on the tableland of Amarakaṣṭaka, which is situated on the east (at a distance of about four miles and a half) of the source or first fall of the Narbada (Mahābhārata, Vana, ch. 85).

Bana—1. The twelve Vanas of Mathurā-maṇḍala or Braja-maṇḍala are Madhuvana, Tālavana, Kumudavana, Vṛindāvana, Khadiravana, Kāmyakavana, Bahulāvana on the western side of the Jamunā; Mahāvana, Vilva-vana, Loha-vana, Bhāṇḍira-vana, and Bhadravana on the eastern side of the Jamuna (Lochana Das's Chaitanya-maṅgala, III, p. 192; Growse's Mathurā, p. 54). The Varāha P. (ch. 153) has Viṣṇuṣṭhāna instead of Tālavana, Kuṇḍa-vana instead of Kumuda-vana, and Bakula-vana instead of Bahulāvana. 2. Same as Aranya (Śabdakalpadruma). 3. The seven Vanas of Kurukṣhetra are :—Kāmyaka, Aditi, Vyāsa, Phalaki, Sūrya, Madhu, and Sita (Vāmana P., ch. 34). 4. For the Himalayan vanas or forests as Nandana, Chaitranātha, etc., see Matsya P., ch. 120.

Bānapura—1. Mahābalipura or Mahābaleśvara or the Seven Pagodas, on the Coromandel coast, Chingleput district, 30 miles south of Madras. It was the metropolis of the ancient kings of the race of Pandion. Its rocks are carved out into porticoes, temples and bas-reliefs, some of them being very beautifully executed. The ruins are connected with the Pauranic story of Bali and Vāmana. The monolithic "Rathas" were constructed by the Pallavas of Conjeveram, who flourished in the fifth century A.D. For descriptions of the temples and remains at Mahābalipura, see JASB., 1853, p. 656.

2. Same as Sonitapura.

Banavāsi—1. North Kanara was called by this name during the Buddhist period (Hari-vanśa, ch. 94). According to Dr. Bühler, it was situated between the Ghats, the Tuṅgabhadra and the Barada (Introduction to the Vikramāṅkadevacharita, p. 34, note). 2. Same as Krauñchapura in North Kanara. A town called Banaouasei (Banavāsi) on the left bank of the Varadā river, a tributary of the Tuṅgabhadra, in North Kanara mentioned by Ptolemy (McCrindle's Ptolemy, p. 176) still exists (Lists of the Antiquarian Remains in the Bombay Presidency, vol. VIII, p. 188). Vanavāsi was the capital of the Kadamba dynasty (founded by Mayūravarma) up to the sixth century when it was overthrown by the Chalukyas. Aśoka sent here a Buddhist missionary named Rakkhita in 245 B.C. Same as Jayanti and Valjayanti. In the Vanavāsi-Mahātmya of the Skanda Purāṇa, Vanavāsi is said to have been the abode of the two Daityas, Madhu and Kaiabha, who were killed here by Viṣṇu. The temple of Madhukeśvara Mahādeva at this place was built by the elder brother Madhu (Da Cunha's History of Chaul and Bassein).

Banāyu—Arabia (T. N. Tarakavāchaspati's Śabdastomamahānidhi; Rāmāyaṇa, Ādi, ch. vi). It was celebrated for its breed of horses (Arthaiśāstra of Kauṭilya, Bk. II, Aśvādhyakṣha). But the ancient name of Arabia as mentioned in the Behistun inscription (JRAS., vol. XV) was Arbaya. It appears from Ragozin's Assyria that the ancient name of Armenia was Van before it was called Urartu by the Assyrians. But Armenia was never celebrated for its horses. The identification of Vanāyu with Arabia appears to be conjectural (see Griffith's Rāmāyaṇa, Vol. I, p. 42 note). Araba (Arabia) has been mentioned by Varāhamihira who lived in the sixth century A.D., (Bṛhat-saṁhitā, XIV, 17). The Padma P. (Svarga, Ādi, ch. iii) mentions the Vānāyavas (people of Vanāyu) among the tribes of the north-western frontier of India.

Baṅga—Bengal. "In Hindu geography," says Dr. Francis Buchanan, "Baga, from which Bengal is a corruption, is applied to only the eastern portion of the delta of the Ganges as Upabaṅga is to the centre of this territory, and Aṅga to its western limits" (Beveridge's "Buchanan Records" in the Calcutta Review, 1894, p. 2). According to Dr. Bhau Daji, Baṅga was the country between the Brahmaputra and the Padmā (Literary Remains of Dr. Bhau Daji). It was a country separated from Puṇḍra, Sumha and Tāmralipta at the time of the Mahābhārata (Sabhā P., ch. 29). Bengal was divided into five provinces: Puṇḍra or North Bengal; Samatapa or East Bengal; Karṇa-suvarṇa or West Bengal; Tāmralipta or South Bengal; Kāmarupa or Assam (Hiuen Tsiang). According to General Cunningham, the province of Bengal was divided into four separate districts after the Christian era. This division is attributed to Ballāla Sena: Barendra and Baṅga to the north of the Ganges, and Rāda and Bāgdi to the south of the river (but see JASB., 1873, p. 211); the first two were separated by the Brahmaputra and the other two by the Jalangi branch of the Ganges. Barendra, between the Mahānandī and Karotoyā corresponds to Puṇḍra, Baṅga to East Bengal, Rāda (to the west of the Bhāgirathī) to Karṇa-suvarṇa and Bāgdi (Samatapa of Hiuen Tsiang and Bhāṅgi of the Ākbarnāma) to South Bengal (Arch. S. Rep., vol. XV, p. 145, and see also Gopāla Bhaṅga's Ballāla-charitam, Pūrva-khaṇḍa, vs. 6, 7). Mr. Pargiter is of opinion that Baṅga must have comprised the modern districts of Murshidabad, Nadia, Jessore, parts of Rājshāhi, Pabna and Faridpur ("Ancient Countries in Eastern India" in JASB., 1897, p. 85). At the time of Aśiśūra, according to Devivara Ghataka, Bengal was divided into Rādha, Baṅga, Barendra and Gauḍa. At the time of Keśava Sena, Baṅga was included in Pauṇḍravarddhana (see Edilpur Inscription: JASB., 1838, p. 45). The name of Baṅga first occurs in the Āitareya Āraṇyaka of the Rig-Veda. According to Sir George Birdwood, Baṅga originally included the districts of Burdwan and Nadia. Baṅga was called Bāṅgālā even in the thirteenth century (Wright's Marco Polo). For further particulars, see Bengal in Part II of this work. Dr. Rājendralāla Mitra (Indo-Aryans, vol. II, ch. 13) gives lists of the Pāla and Sena kings [see also Ep. Ind., vol. I, p. 305] (Deopārā Inscriptions regarding the Senas); Ibid., vol. II, p. 160 (Bādal Pillar Inscription); Ibid., p. 347 (Vaidyadeva Inscription at Benares); JASB., 1838, p. 40 (Edilpur Inscription of Keśava Sena from Bakarganj]. According to the copperplate inscription of Lakshmaṇa Sena found in Sirajganj in the district of Pabna, it appears that the Sena kings were Kshatriyas who came from Karṇāṭa. For the ancient trade and commerce of Bengal, see Mr. W. H. Schoff's Periplus; Bernier's Travels, p. 408; Tavernier's Travels, Bk. III; Mr. N. Law's article, Modern Review, 1918. See Saptagrāma and Karṇasuvārṇa.

Bānīagr ma—Same as Bāniyagāma.

Bāniyagāma—Vaiśālī (or Beśād) in the district of Muzaffarpur (Tirhut); in fact, Bāniyagāma was a portion of the ancient town of Vaiśālī (Dr. Hoernle's Uvāsagadasādo). See Kuṇḍagāma.

Baṇḍī—Same as Karura, the capital of Chera or Kerala, the Southern Konkan or the Malabar Coast (Caldwell's Drav. Comp. Gram., 3rd ed., p. 96).

Baṇḍulā—The river Manjerā, a tributary of the Godāvarī. Both these rivers rise from the Sahya-pāda mountain or Western Ghats (Matsya P., ch. 113). Baṇḍulā is mentioned as Maṇḍulā in the Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma P., ch. 9.

Baṇkshu—Same as Chakshu (Bhāgavata P., v. 17).

Bārā—Same as Baruṇā (Ata. Kalp., 99).

Baradā—1. The river Wardha in the Central Provinces (Mālavikāgnimitra, Act V; Agni P., ch. 109; Mbh. Vana, ch. 85; Padma P., Ādi., ch. 39). 2. A tributary of the Tuṅgabhadrā, on which the town of Vanavāsī, the abode of the two Daityas Madhu and Kaiṭabha, is situated. See Vanavāsī and Vedavatī.

Barāha-kṣhetra—1. Barāmūla in Kāśmīra on the right bank of the Jhelum, where Viṣṇu is said to have incarnated as Varāha (boar). There is a temple of Ādi-Varāha (see Śākara-kṣhetra). 2. Another place of the same name exists at Nāthpur on the Kuśī in the district of Purnea below the Triveṇī; see Mahā-Kausthika (JASB., XVII, 638). It is the Kokāmukha of the Varāha Purāṇa sacred to Varāha, one of the incarnations of Viṣṇu (Vardha P., ch. 140). See Kokāmukha.

arāha-Parvata—A hill near Barāmūla in Kāśmīra [Viṣṇu-Saṃhitā, ch. 85; Institutes of Viṣṇu, SBE., vol. VII, p. 256, note].

Barapa—1. Bulandshahr near Delhi in the Punjab (Growse, JASB., 1883). This town is said to have been founded by Janmejaya, son of Parikshit and great-grandson of Arjuna (Bulandshahr by Growse, in the Calcutta Review, 1883, p. 342). At Ahar, 21 miles north-east of Bulandshahr, he performed the snake-sacrifice (JASB., 1883, p. 274). A Jaina inscription also shows that it was called Uchchanagara (Dr. Bühler, Ep. Ind., vol. 1, p. 375). 2. Same as Aornos (Ind. Ant., I, 22).

Barapā—Same as Baruṇā (Kārma P., I, ch. 31).

Barapāṇa—Same as Parpāṇa.

Bārāpaṣī—Benares situated at the junction of the rivers Barpā and Asi, from which the name of the town has been derived (Vāmana P., ch. III). It was formerly situated at the confluence of the Ganges and the Gumti (Mbh., Anuśāśana, ch. 30). It was the capital of Kāśī (Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara, ch. 48). At the time of Buddha, the kingdom of Kāśī formed a part of the kingdom of Kośala (see Kāśī). According to James Prinsep, Benares or Kāśī was founded by Kāśa or Kāśīrāja, a descendant of the Pururavas, king of Pratiśthāna (see Pratiśthāna). Kāśīrāja's grandson was Dhanvantari; Dhanvantari's grandson was Dīvodāsa, in whose reign Buddhism superseded Siva-worship at Benares, though it appears that the Buddhist religion was again superseded by Saivism after a short period. In 1027, Benares became part of Gauḍa, then governed by Mahipāla, and Buddhism was again introduced in his reign or in the reign of his successors Sthirapāla and Vasantapāla. Benares was wrested from the Pāla kings by Chandra Deva (1072—1096) and annexed to the kingdom of Kanauj. Towards the close of the twelfth century, Benares was conquered by Muhammad Ghuri who defeated Jaya Chand of Kanauj (James Prinsep's Benares Illustrated, Introduction, p. 8; Vāyu P., Uttara, ch. 30). In the seventh century, it was visited by the celebrated Chinese traveller Hiuen Tsiang. He has thus described the city and its presiding god Viśveśvara, one of the twelve Great Liṅgas of Mahādeva: "In the capital there are twenty Deva temples, the towers and halls of which are of sculptured stone and carved wood. The foliage of trees combines to shade (the sites), whilst pure streams of water encircle them. The statue of Deva Mahēśvara, made of teou-shih (brass), is somewhat less than 100 feet high. Its appearance is grave and majestic, and appears as though really living." The Padma P. (Uttara, ch. 67) mentions the names of Viśveśvara, Vindumādhava, Maṇikarpikā, and Jñānavāpi in Kāśī (Benares). The present Viśveśvara, which is a mere Liṅga, dates its existence since the original image of the god, described by Hiuen Tsiang, was destroyed by the iconoclast Aurangzebe and thrown into the Jñānavāpi, a well situated behind the present temple. There can be no doubt that Benares was again converted into a Buddhist city by the Pāla Rājās of Bengal, and Śiva-worship was not restored till its annexation in the eleventh century by the kings of Kanauj, who were staunch believers in the Pauranic creed. The shrines of Ādi-Viśveśvara, Veṇimādhava, and the Bakarya-kuṇḍa were built on the sites of Buddhist temples with materials taken from those temples. The temple of Ādi-Keśava is one of the oldest temples in Benares: it is mentioned in the Prabodha-Chandrodaya Nāṭaka (Act IV) written by Kṛṣṇa Miśra in the eleventh century A.D. The names of Mahādeva Tilabhāṇḍeśvara and Daśāśvamedheśvara are also mentioned in the Śiva Purāṇa (Pt. 1, ch. 39). The Maṇikarpikā is the most sacred of all cremation ghats in India, and it is associated with the closing scenes of the life of Rājā Hariścandra of Ayodhyā, who became a slave to a Chāṇḍāla for paying off his promised debt (Kṣhemeśvara's Chāṇḍa-kauśika; Mārkaṇḍeya P., ch. viii). The old fort of Benares which was used by the Pāla Rājās of Bengal and the Rathore kings of Kanauj, was situated above the Rāj-ghāṭ at the confluence of the Barṇā and the Ganges (Bholanath Chunder's Travels of a Hindoo, vol. I). Benares is one of the Pīṭhas where Sati's left hand is said to have fallen, and is now represented by the goddess Annapūrṇā, but the Tantrachudāmaṇi mentions the name of the goddess as Viśālākṣhi. There were two Brahmanical Universities in ancient India, one at Benares and the other at Takshasilā (Taxila) in the Punjab. For the observatory at Benares and the names of the instruments with sketches, see Hooker's Himalayan Journals, Vol. I, p. 67. Benares is said to be the birth-place of Kāśyapa Buddha, but Fa Hian says that he was born at Too-wei, which has been identified by General Cunningham with Tadwa or Tandwa (Legge's Fa Hian, ch. xxi; Arch.

S. Rep., XI), nine miles to the west of Śrāvastī. Kāśyapa died at Gurupāda hill (see Gurupāda-giri). But according to the Aṭṭhakathā of Buddhaghosha, Kāśyapa (Kassapa) was born at Benares and died at Mrigadāva or modern Sarnāth (JASB., 1838, p. 796.) In the Fuṣāñjaya-Jātaka (Jātakas IV, 75), the ancient names of Benares are said to have been Surandhana, Sudarsana, Brahmavarddhana, Pushpavatī, and Ramya.

Bārāṇasī-Kaṭaka—Kaṭak in Orissa, at the confluence of the Mahānadi and the Kāṭjuri, founded in A.D. 989 by Nṛpa Keśari, who reigned between A.D. 941 and 953. He removed his seat of government to the new capital. According to tradition, his capital had been Chaudwar which he abandoned, and constructed the fort at Kaṭak called Baḍabāṭī. The remains of the fort with the ditch around it still exist. For a description of the fort (Barabāṭī), see Lieut. Kittoe's "Journal of a Trip to Cuttack" in JASB., 1838, p. 203. The former capitals of the Keśari kings were Bhuvaneśvara and Jāipur (Hunter's Orissa and Dr. R. L. Mitra's Antiquities of Orissa, vol. II, p. 164). Fleet's identification of Vinītapura and Yayātinagara of the inscriptions with Kaṭak appears to be very doubtful. The strong embankment of the Kāṭjuri is said to have been constructed by Markaṭ Keśari in A.D. 1906. The town contains a beautiful image of Kṛishṇa known by the name of Śākshi-Gopāla (Chaitanya-charitāmṛita, II, 5).

Bārāṇāvata—Barnawa, nineteen miles to the north-west of Mirat where an attempt was made by Duryodhana to burn the Pāṇḍavas (Führer's MAI., and Mbh., Ādi, ch. 148). It was one of the five villages demanded by Kṛishṇa from Duryodhana on behalf of Yudhiṣṭhira (Mbh., Udyoga, ch. 82).

Barddhamāna—1. From the Kathā-sarī-sāgara (chs. 24, 25), Barddhamāna appears to have been situated between Allahabad and Benares, and north of the Vindhya hills. It is mentioned in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa and Vetālu-pañchaviṃśati. 2. Barddhamāna was called Asthikagrāma because a Yaksha named Śālapāṇi had collected there an enormous heap of bones of those killed by him. Mahāvīra, the last Jaina Tirthaṅkara, passed the first rainy season at Barddhamāna after attaining Kevalīship (Jacobi's Kalpasūtra, SBE., vol. XXII, p. 261). From a copper-plate inscription found at Banskhera, 25 miles from Shah-Jahanpur, it appears that Barddhamāna is referred to as Barddhamāna-koṭi (see also Mārkaṇḍeya P., ch. 58), where Harshavarddhana had his camp in A.D. 638. Barddhamāna-koṭi is the present Bardhankoti in Dinajpur. Hence Barddhamāna is the same as Bardhankoti. Barddhamāna is mentioned as a separate country from Baḍga (Devī P., ch. 46). 3. Barddhamāna (Vadhamāna) is mentioned in Spence Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, p. 480, as being situated near Danta. 4. The Lalitpur inscription in JASB., 1883, p. 67, speaks of another town of Barddhamāna in Malwa. 5. Another Barddhamāna or Bardhamānapur was situated in Kathiāwād: it is the present Vadvāna, where Merutuṅga, the celebrated Jaina scholar, composed his Prabandha-chintāmaṇi in A.D. 1423: he was also the author of Mahāpurushacharita, Shāddarśanavichāra, &c. (Merutuṅga's Therāvall by Dr. Bhau Daji; Prabandha-chintāmaṇi, Tawney's Trans., p. 134, and his Preface, p. vii).

- Barendra—Barenda (Devī P., ch. 39), in the district of Maldah in Bengal, comprising the Thānās of Gomastapur, Nawabganj, Gajol and Malda: it formed a part of the ancient kingdom of Puṇḍra. It was bounded by the Ganges, the Mahānandā, Kāmrup, and the Karatoyā. Its principal town was Mahāsthāna, seven miles north of Bogra, which was also called Barendra (JASB., 1875, p. 183). See Puṇḍra-vardhana.
- Barnu—Bannu in the Punjab: it is the Falanu of Hiuen Tsiang and Pohna of Fa Hian. It is mentioned by Pāṇini (Cunningham's Anc. Geo., p. 84; Ind. Ant., I, p. 22).
- Barshāṇa—Barshan, near Bharatpur, on the border of the Chhāta Parganā in the district of Mathurā, where Rādhikā was removed by her parents Brīshabhānu and Kīrti from Rāval, her birth-place. Rādhikā's love for Kṛishṇa as incarnation of Nārāyaṇa has been fully described in the Purāṇas. See Āṣṭīgrāma. Barshāṇ is perhaps a corruption of Brīshabhānupura. Barshāṇ, however, was also called Barasānu, a hill on the slope of which Brīshabhānupura was situated.
- Barsha Parvata—The six Barsha Parvatas are Nēla, Nishadha, Sveta, Hemakūṭa, Himavān, and Śrīṅgavān (Varāha P., ch. 75).
- Bartraghnī—Same as Brītraghnī and Betravallī 2.
- Baruṇā—The river Barṇā in Benares (Mahābhārata, Bhīshma, ch. 9).
- Baruṇa-tīrtha—Same as Saṅgarāja-tīrtha (Mbh., Vana. 82).
- Barusha—The Po-lu-sha of Hiuen Tsiang. It has been identified with Shahbazgarhi in the Yusufzai country, forty miles north-east of Peshawar. A rock edict of Aśoka exists at this place.
- Bāsantaka-kshetra—Same as Bindubāsinī (Bṛihadharma P., I, 6, 14).
- Basatl—The country of the Basatis or Basata, a Tibeto-Burman tribe, living about the modern Gangtok near the eastern border of Tibet (Mbh., Sabhā, ch. 51; Mr. W. H. Schoff's Periplus, p. 279). McOrindle, on the authority of Hemachandra's Abhidhāna, places it between the Indus and the Jhelam (Invasion of India, p. 156 note). It comprised the district of Rawal Pindi.
- Bāsika—Same as Babya (Matsya P., ch. 113).
- Basishṭha-āśrama—1. The hermitage of Rishi Vāśishṭha was situated at Mount Abu (see Arbuda). At a place one mile to the north of the Ayodhyā station of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. 3. On the Sandhyāchala mountain near Kāmarupa in Aśeem (Kālikā Purāṇa, ch. 51).
- Basishṭhī—1. The river Gumti (Hemakosha). 2. A river in the Ratnagiri district, Bombay Presidency (Bomb. Gaz., X, pp. 6—8; Mbh. Vana, ch. 84).
- Bastrāpatha-kshetra—See Girinagara.
- Basudhārā-tīrtha—The place where the Alakānandā (q.v.) has got its source, about four miles north of Badrināth, near the village Manāl.

Basya—Bassein in the province of Bombay. Basyā is mentioned in one of the Kanheri inscriptions. It was included in Barālātā (Barār), one of the seven divisions of Parasurāma-kshetra. The principal place of pilgrimage in it is the Bimala or Nirmala Tirtha mentioned in the Skanda Purāṇa. The Bimalesvara Mahādeva was destroyed by the Portuguese (Da Cunha's Hist. of Chaul and Bassein). It was the kingdom of the Śilāhāras from whom it passed into the hands of the Yīdavās in the thirteenth century (JRAS., vol. II, p. 380).

Bāṭadhāna—A country mentioned in the Mahābhārata (Sabhā, ch. 32) as situated in Northern India: it was conquered by Nakula, one of the Pāṇḍavas. It has been supposed to have been the same as Veṭṭhadvīpa of the Buddhist period (see Veṭṭhadvīpa): see JASB., 1902, p. 161. But this identification does not appear to be correct, as in the Mahābhārata (Bhishma P., ch. 9; Sabhā P., ch. 130), in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, ch. 57 and in other Purāṇas, Bāṭadhāna has been named between Bālīhika and Ābhira, and placed on the west of Indraprastha or Delhi; so it appears to be a country in the Punjab. Hence it may be identified with Bhatnair. Bāṭadhāna has, however, been identified with the country on the east side of the Sutlej, southwards from Ferozepur (Pargiter's Mārkaṇḍeya P., p. 312, note).

Batapadrapura—Baroda, the capital of the Gaikwar, where Kumārāpāla fled from Cambay (Bhagavanlal Indrajī's Early History of Gujarat, p. 183).

Batapi—See Bātāpipura.

Bātāpipura—Badami near the Malprabha river, a branch of the Krishnā, in the Kaladgi district, now called the Bijapur district, in the province of Bombay, three miles from the Badami station of the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway. It was the capital of Pulakeśī I, king of Mahārāshṭra (Mo-ho-la-cha of Hiuen Tsiang) in the middle of the sixth century A.D.; he was the grandson of Jaya Simha, the founder of the Chālukya dynasty. He performed the Aśvamedha sacrifice. It was Pulakeśī II, the grandson of Pulakeśī I, who defeated Harshavardhana or Śilāditya II of Kanauj. There are three caves of Brahmanical excavation, one of which bears the date A.D. 579, and one Jaina cave temple, A.D. 650, at Badami. One of the caves contains a figure composed of a bull and an elephant in such a way that when the body of one is hid, the other is seen (Burgess's Belgam and Kaladgi Districts, p. 16). Bātāpi is said to have been destroyed by the Pallava king Narasimhavarman I (Ep. Ind., vol. III, p. 277). The name of Bātāpipura was evidently derived from Bātāpi, the brother of Ilvala (of the city of Manimati—see Ind. Ant., XXV, p. 163, note): Bātāpi was killed by Rishi Agastya on his way to the south (Mbh., Vana, ch. 96). See Ilvalapura.

Bateśa—Same as Bateśvaranātha (Agni P., ch. 109).

Bateśvaranātha—Same as Śilāsaṅganātha. The temple of Bateśvaranātha is situated four miles to the north of Kahalgāon (Colgong) on the Pātharghātī Hills called also Kasdi Hill. The Uttara-Purāṇa describes the rock excavations and temple of Bateśvarnātha at this place (Franklin's Palibothra). The rock excavations and ruins at Patharghâtâ are the remains of the Buddhist monastery named Bikramasîlâ Saighârâma (see Bikramasîlâ Vihâra).

Batsya—A country to the west of Allahabad. It was the kingdom of Râja Udayana; its capital was Kauśâmbî (see Kausambi). At the time of the Râmâyana (I, 52), its northern boundary was the Ganges.

Batsyapattana—Kauśâmbî, the capital of Batsya-deśa, the kingdom of Batsya Râja Parantapa and Udayana (Kathâsarit-sâgara). See Kausambi.

Bedagarbhapurî—Buxar, in the district of Shahabad in the province of Bengal (Brahmāṇḍa P., Pūrva Kh., chs. 1—5 called Vedagarbha-mâhât; and Suanda P., Sûta-saṃhitâ, IV, Yajña Kh., 24). The word Buxar, however, seems to be the contraction of Vyâghrasara, a tank attached to the temple of Gauri-śaṅkara situated in the middle of the town. Same as Viśvâmitra-śrâma, Siddhâśrama, Vyâghrasara and Vyâghrapura.

Beda-parvata—A hill in Tirukkalukkunram in the Madras Presidency, on which is situated the sacred place called Pakshi-tîrtha. See Pakshi-tîrtha (Devî P., ch. 39; Ind. Ant., X, 198).

Bedaranya—A forest in Tanjore, five miles north of Point Calimere: it was the hermitage of Rishi Agastya (Devî-Bhâgavata, VII, 38; Gangoly's South Indian Bronzes, p. 16).

Bedasmṛiti—It is the same as Bedaśrutî. (Mbh., Bhishma, ch. 9).

Bedaśrutî—1. The river Baita in Oudh between the rivers Tonse and Gumti (Râmâyana, Ayodhyâ, ch. 49). 2. The river Besulâ in Malwa. The name of Bedaśrutî does not appear in many of the Purâṇas, only the river Bedasmṛiti being mentioned.

Bedavati—1. The river Hagari, a tributary of the Tuṅgabhadra in the district of Bellary and Mysore [Skanda P., Sahyâdri kh.; Ind. Ant., vol. XXX (Fleet)]. But see Varâha P., ch. 85. The river Baradâ or Bardâ, southern tributary of the Kṛishṇâ, the Baradâ of the Agni Purâṇa, CIX, 22 (Pargiter's Mârkaṇḍeya P., p. 303). See Baradâ.

Bedisa-giri—Same as Bessanagara (Oldenberg's Dipavamsa) and Bidîâ or Bhilsa, 26 miles north-east of Bhopal in the Gwalior State.

Begâ—Same as Begavati (Padma P., Srishti, ch. 11).

Begavatî—1. The river Baiga or Bygi in the district of Madura (Śiva P., Bk. II, ch. 10; Padma P., Uttara, ch. 84; Mackenzie Collection, pp. 142, 211). The town of Madura is situated on the bank of this river. 2. Kâñchipura or Conjeveram stands on the northern bank of a river called Begavati.

Behat—The river Jhelum in the Punjab.

Beltura—Berul, Yerulâ, Elura, or Ellara in the Nizam's Dominion (Ind. Ant., XXII, p. 193; Bṛihat-saṃhitâ, XIV, 14).

Benâ—The river Wain-Gaigâ in the Central Provinces (Padma P., Âdi kh., ch. 3). Same as Benva. It is a tributary of the Godâvarî [Mbh., Vana, ch. 85; Padma P. Svarga (Âdi), ch. 19].

Benakataka—Warangal, the capital of Telingana or Andhra. (Literary Remains of Dr. Bhau Daji, p. 107).

Bengi—The capital of Andhra, situated north-west of the Elur lake, between the Godavari and the Krishnâ in the Kistna district. It is now called Begi or Pedda-Begi (Sewell's Sketch of the Dynasties of Southern India, p. 99). Vishnupvardhana, brother of Pulakoff II, founded here a branch of the Chalukya dynasty in the seventh century A.D. (see Andhra). Its name is mentioned in the Vikramânâkadevacharita, VI p. 26 (see Bühler's note in the Introduction to this work at p. 35). From the capital, the country was also called Bengi-desa which according to Sir W. Elliot, comprised the districts between the Krishnâ and the Godavari (JRAS., vol. IV). It is now called the Northern Circars (Dr. Wilson's Indian Caste, vol. II, p. 88). Its original boundaries were, on the west the Eastern Ghats, on the north the Godavari and on the south the Krishnâ (Bomb. Gaz., vol. I, Pt. II, p. 280).

Beni—1. A branch of the Krishnâ (Padma P., Uttara, ch. 74), same as Benvâ. 2. The Krishnâ itself.

Beni-gaṅgâ—The river Wain-Gaṅgâ: see Benvâ (Brihat-Sîva P., Uttara, ch. 20).

Beṅkaṭa-giri—The Tirumalai mountain near Tripati or Tirupati in the north Arcot district, about seventy-two miles to the north-west of Madras, where Râmânuja, the founder of the Sîri sect of the Vaishnavas, established the worship of Vishṇu called Veṅkaṭasvâmi or Bâlâji Bîṣvanâtha in the place of Śiva in the twelfth century of the Christian era: same as Tripadi. See Srîraṅgam. The Padma Purâna (Uttara kh., ch. 90) mentions the name of Râmânuja and the Veṅkaṭa hill. See Tripadi. Beṅkaṭâdri is also called Seshâdri (Ep. Ind., vol. III, p. 240; Skanda P., Vishṇu kh., chs. 16, 35). For the list of kings of Veṅkaṭagiri, see JASB., (1838) p. 516.

Benugrama—Same as Sugandhâvarti.

Benuvana-vihâra—The monastery was built by king Bimbisâra in the bamboo-grove situated on the north-western side of Râjgir and presented to Buddha where he resided when he visited the town after attaining Buddhahood. It has been stated in the Mahāvagga (I, 22, 17) that Veṇuvana, which was the pleasure-garden of king Seniya (Śrenika) Bimbisâra was not too far from the town of Râjagriha nor too near it (see Girivrajapura). It was situated outside the town at a short distance from the northern gate at the foot of the Baibhâra hill (Beal's Fo-Kwa-Ki, ch. xxx; Av. Kalp., ch. 39).

Benvâ—1. The Benâ, a branch of the Krishnâ, which rises in the Western Ghats. Same as Beni. 2. The Krishnâ. 3. The river Wain-Gaṅgâ, a tributary of the Godavari, which rises in the Vindhya-pâda range (Mârkaṇḍeya P., ch. 57). Same as Benâ. It is called Beni Gaṅgâ (Brihat-Sîva P., Uttara, ch. 20).

Benya—Same as Benâ: the river Wain-Gaṅgâ.

Bessanagara—Besnagar, close to Sanchi in the kingdom of Bhopal, at the junction of the Besali or Bes river with the Betva, about three miles from Bhilaa. It is also called Chetiya, Chetiyānagara, or Chetyagiri (Chaityagiri) in the Mahāvastu. It was the ancient capital of Daśārāja. Aśoka married Devī, the daughter of the chieftain of this place, on his way to Ujjayinī, of which place, while a prince, he was nominated governor. By Devī, he had twin sons, Ujjeniya and Mahinda and a daughter Saṅghāmitta. The two last named were sent by their father to introduce Buddhism into Ceylon with a branch of the Bodhi-tree of Buddha-Gayā. Aśoka was the grandson of Chandragupta of Pāṭaliputra, and reigned from 273 to 232 B.C. A column was discovered at Besnagar, which from the inscription appears to have been set up by Heliodorus of Taxila who was a devotee of Viṣṇu, as Garuḍa-dhvaḥ, in the reign of Antialcidas, a Bactrian king who reigned about 150 B.C. See Chetiagiri.

Bethadīpa—It has not been correctly identified, but it seems to be the modern Bethia to the east of Gorakhpur and south of Nepal. The Brahmins of Bethadīpa obtained an eighth part of the relics of Buddha's body after his death (Mahāparinibbāna Sutta, ch. vi). See Kuśinagara. It seems that the extensive ruins consisting of three rows of earthen barrows or huge conical mounds of earth, about a mile to the north-east of Lauriya Navandgaḍ (Lauriya Nandangaḍ) and 15 miles to the north-west of Bethia in the district of Champaran, are the remains of the stūpa which had been built over the relics of Buddha by the Brahmins of Bethadīpa. At a short distance from these ruins stands the lion pillar of Aśoka containing his edicts. Dīpa in Bethadīpa is evidently a corruption of Dhāpa, which again is a corruption of Dāgaba or Dhātugarbha or Stūpa containing Buddha's relics [cf. Mahāsthāna, the ancient name of which (Sitā-dhāpa or Sitā-dhātugarbha) was changed into Sitā-dīpa]. The change of Dīpa into Dia is an easy step. Hence it is very probable that from Betha-dia comes Bethiā.

Betravati—1. The river Betva in the kingdom of Bhopal, an affluent of the Jamunā (Meghadūta, Pt. I, 25), on which stands Bhilsa or the ancient Vidiśā. 2. The river Vātrak, a branch of the Sābarmatī in Gujarat (Padma P., Uttara, ch. 53, on which Kaira (ancient Khetaka) is situated [JASB. (1838) p. 908]. Same as Brītraghni and Bāritraghni.

Bhaddīya—It is also called Bhadiya and Bhadiyanagara in the Pāli books. It may be identified with Bhadaria, eight miles to the south of Bhagalpore [see my "Notes on Ancient Aṅga" in JASB., X, (1914), p. 337]. Mahāvira, the last of the Jaina Tīrthaṅkaras, visited this place and spent here two Pajjusanas (rainy-season retirement). It was the birth-place of Viśākhā, the famous female disciple of Buddha (see Brāvastī). She was the daughter of Dhanañjaya and grand-daughter of Maṇḍaka, both of whom were treasurers to the king of Aṅga. Buddha visited Bhaddīya (Mahāvagga, V, 8, 3), when Viśākhā was seven years old and resided in the Jātiyāvana for three months and converted Bhaddaji, son of a rich merchant [Mahāvagga, V, 8; Mahā-Panāda-Jātaka (No. 264) in the Jātakas (Cam. Ed.), vol. II, p. 229]. Viśākhā's father removed to a place called Sāketa, 21 miles to the south of Srāvastī, where she was married to Pūrṇavarddhana or Punyavardhana, son of Migāra, the treasurer of Prasenajit, king of Srāvastī. She caused Migāra, who was a follower of Nigrantha-Nāthaputra, to adopt the Buddhist faith, and hence she was called Migāramātā (Mahāvagga, VIII, 51; Spence Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, 2nd ed., p. 226). It appears that at the time of Buddha, the kingdom of Aṅga had been annexed to the Magadha kingdom by Bimbisāra, as Bhaddīya is said to have been situated in that kingdom (Mahāvagga, VI, 34; Spence Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, p. 166).

Bhadra—It is evidently the Yarkand river on which the town of Yarkand is situated: it is also called Zarafshan (Vishṇu P., Bk. II, ch. 2). It is one of the four rivers into which the Ganges is said to have divided itself (Bhāgavata P., V, 17).

Bhadrakarma—1. Karṇapura or Karnāli, on the south bank of the Nerbada. It contains one of the celebrated shrines of Mahādeva (Mahā-Śiva-Purāṇa, Pt. 1, ch. 15, and Mahā-bhārata, Vana P., ch. 84). See Eraṇḍi. 2. A sacred hrada (lake or reservoir) in Trino. treśvara or modern Than in Kathiawad (q.v.) (Kūrma P., I, 34; Skanda P., Prabhāsa Kh., Arbuda, ch. 8).

Bhadrāvati—Bhaṭala, ten miles north of Warora in the district of Chanda, Central Provinces. Bhandak, in the same district and 18 miles north-west of Chanda town, is also traditionally the ancient Bhadrāvati. It was the capital of Yuvanāśva of the Jaimini-Bhārata. Cunningham has identified Bhadrāvati with Bhilsa (Bhilsa Topes, p. 364; JASB., 1847, p. 745). Buari, an old place near Pind Dadan Khan in the district of Jhelum in the Punjab, also claims the honour of being the ancient Bhadrāvati: it contains many ruins (JASB., XIX, p. 537). The Padma-Purāṇa (Uttara, ch. 30) places Bhadrāvati on the banks of the Sarasvatī. In the Jaimini-Bhārata, ch. 6, Bhadrāvati is said to be 20 Yojans distant from Hastināpura. Ptolemy's Bardaeotis has been identified with Bhadrāvati: he places it to the east of the Vindhya range (McCordle's Ptolemy, p. 162), and it has been considered to be identical with Bhārhut (Arch. S. Rep., XXI, p. 92).

Bhāganagara—Hyderabad in the Deccan.

Bhāgaprastha—Bagpat, thirty miles to the west of Mirat, one of the five Prasthas or villages said to have been demanded by Yudhishtira from Duryodhana (see Pāṇiprastha). It is situated on the bank of the Jamuna in the district of Mirat.

Bhāgrathī—Same as Gaṅgā (Harivaṃśa, I, ch. 15).

Bhāgvatī—The river Bāgmati in Nepal: Baggumudā of the Buddhists (Chullavagga, Pt. XI, ch. I).

Bhaktapura—Bhātgāon, the former capital of Nepal. It was also called Bhagatapattana. Narendra Deva, king of this place, is said to have brought Avalokiteśvara or Siphanaṭha-Lokeśvara (Padmapāṇi) from Putalakā-parvata in Assam to the city of Lalitapattan in Nepal to ward off the bad effect of a drought of twelve years. The celebrated Shaḍ-akshari (six-lettered) Mantra "Om Mani padme hum" so commonly used in Tibet is an invocation of Padmapāṇi: it means "The mystic triform Deity is in him of the Jewel and the Lotus," i.e. in Padmapāṇi who bears in either hand a Jewel and a Lotus, the lotus being a favourite type of creative power with the Buddhists.

Bhālīnasah—Bolan (pass). It is mentioned in the Rigveda (Macdonell and Keith: Vedic Index of Names and Subjects, vol. II, p. 99).

Bhālāta—A country situated by the side of Suktimāna mountain: it was conquered by Bhīma (Mbh., Sabhā, ch. 30). It is also mentioned in the Kalki-Purāṇa as being conquered by Kalki. Bhālāta is perhaps a corruption of Bhar-rāshṭra. The name does not appear in the other Purāṇas.

Bharadvāja-ārama—In Prayāga or Allahabad, the hermitage of Ṛishi Bharadvāja was situated (Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhya K., ch. 54). The image of the Ṛishi is worshipped in a temple built on the site of his hermitage at Colonelganj. The hermitage was visited by Rāmachandra on his way to the Daṇḍakāraṇya.

Bharahut—In the Central Provinces, 120 miles to the south-west of Allahabad and nine miles to the south-east of the Sutna railway station, celebrated for its stūpa said to belong to 250 B.C.

Bhāratavarsha—India, India (Intu of Hiuen Tsiang, who travelled in India from 629 to 645 A.D.), is a corruption of Sindhu (q.v.) or Sapta Sindhu (Hafta Hendu of the Vendidad, I, 73). It was named after a king called Bharata (Liṅga P., Pūrva Bhāga, ch. 47; Brahma P., ch. 13), and before Bharata, it was called Himāhva-varsha (Brahmāṇḍa P., Pūrva, ch. 33, śloka 55) and Haimavata-varsha (Liṅga P., Pt. I, ch. 49). In the Pauranic period, Bhāratavarsha was bounded on the north by the Himalayas, on the south by the ocean, on the east by the country of the Kirātas and on the west by the country of the Yavanas (Viṣṇu P., II, ch. 3; Mārkaṇḍeya P., ch. 57). Bhāratavarsha represents a political conception of India, being under one king, whereas Jambudvīpa represents a geographical conception.

Bhārgava—Western Assam, the country of the Bhars or Bhors (Brahmāṇḍa P., ch. 49).

Bhārgavi—A small river near Puri in Orissa was called Daṇḍabhāṅgā from the fact that Nityānanda broke at Kamalapura on the bank of this river the Daṇḍa or ascetic stick of Chaitanya and threw the broken pieces into the stream (Chaitanya-charitāmṛita, II). It was also called Bhāḡi.

Bhartṛi-sṭhāna—Same as Svāmi-tīrtha (Padma P., Svarga, ch. 19).

Bharu—The name of a kingdom of which Bharukachchha was a seaport; see Bharukachchha.

Bharukachchha—Baroach, the Barygaza of the Greeks (Vinaya, III, 38). Bali Rājā attended by his priest Sukrāchārya performed a sacrifice at this place, when he was deprived of his kingdom by Viṣṇu in the shape of a dwarf, Vāmana, (Matsya P., ch. 114). Sarva-varmā Āchārya, the author of the Kātantra or Kalāpa Vyākaraṇa and contemporary of Rājā Śātarāhāna of Pratishṭhāna was a resident of Bharukachchha (Kathā-sarit-Sāgara, Pt. I, ch. 6). The Jaina temple of Śakunikāvihāra was constructed by Āmrabhaṭa in the reign of Kumārapāla, king of Pattana, in the 12th century. Bharukachchha was also called Bhṛigupura (Tawney: Prabandhachintāmaṇi, p. 136). In the Suppāraka Jātaka (Jātaka, Cam. ed., iv, p. 86), Bharukachchha is said to be a seaport town in the kingdom of Bharu.

It was visited by Yuddhishthira as a place of pilgrimage, and it is also mentioned in the Padma P., Svarga-Kh., ch. 11; Mahābhārata, Vana P., ch. 82).

Bhoja—See Bhojapura (Padma P., Svarga, ch. 3).

Bhojakata-pura—The second capital of Vidarbha, founded by Rukmi, the brother of Rukmiṇī who was the consort of Kṛishṇa. It was near the Nerbada (Harivaṃśa, ch. 117). Bhojakatapura, or in its contracted form Bhojapura, may be identified with Bhojapura, which is six miles to the south-east of Bhilsa (Vidisa) in the kingdom of Bhopal containing many Buddhist topes called Pipaliya Bijoli Topes. Ancient Vidarbha, according to General Cunningham, included the whole kingdom of Bhopal on the north of the Nerbada (Bhilsa Topes, p. 363). The Bhojas ruled over Vidarbha and are mentioned in one of Aśoka's Edicts (see Dr. Bhandarkar's Hist. of the Dekkan, III). In the Chammak Copperplate inscription of Pravarasena II of the Vākātaka dynasty, Bhojakata is described as a kingdom which coincides with Berar or ancient Vidarbha, and Chammak, i.e., the village Charmāṭka of the inscription, four miles south-west of Elichpur in the Amraoti district, is mentioned as being situated in the Bhojakata kingdom (Corp. Ins. Ind., III, 236; JRAS., 1914, p. 321). For further particulars, see Bhojapur (1) in Part II of this work.

Bhojapāla—Bhopal in Central India, which is a contraction of Bhojapāla or Bhoja's Dam which was constructed during the reign of Rājā Bhoja of Dhar to hold up the city lakes (Knowles-Foster's Veiled Princess; Ind. Ant., XVII, 348).

Bhojapura—1. Mathurā was the capital of the Bhojas (Bhāgavata, Pt. 1, ch. 10). 2. Near Dumraon in the district of Shāhabād in Bengal (see Bhojapur in Pt. II of this work). 3. Same as Bhojakatapura. It contains the temple of Bhojēśvara Mahādeva and a Jaina temple (JASB., 1839, p. 814). The temple of Bhojēśvara was built in the 11th century A.D. For further particulars regarding the temple and dam, see JASB., 1847, p. 740; Ind. Ant., XXVII, 348. Bhoja is mentioned in the Brahmāṇḍa-Purāṇa as a country in the Vindhya range. It is the Stagabaza (or Taṭaka-Bhoja or tank of Bhoja) of Ptolemy. 4. On the right bank of the Ganges, 30 or 35 miles from Kānyakubja or Kanauj (Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 189).

Bhota—See Bhotāṅga.

Bhotāṅga—Bhotan. Bhoṭa according to Lassen is the modern Tibet (Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 124). According to the Tārā Tantra, Bhoṭa extends from Kāśmir to the west of Kāmarūpa and to the south of Mānasa-sarovara.

Bhotānta—Same as Bhotāṅga (JRAS., 1863, p. 71).

Bhrigu-śrama—1. Balia in the United Provinces, said to have been the capital of Rājā Bali. Bāwan, six miles west of Harloi in Oudh, also claims the honour of being the capital of Bali Rājā, who was deprived of his kingdom by Viṣṇu in his Vāmana-avatāra. Bhṛigu Rishi once performed asceticism at Balia: there is a temple dedicated to the Rishi, which is frequented by pilgrims. Balia was once situated on the confluence of the Ganges and the Saraju; it was called Bāgrāsan, being a corruption of Bhṛigu-śrama. Bhṛigu Rishi "is said to have held Dadri or Dardara on the banks of the Ganges, where he performed his ceremonies on the spot called Bhṛigu-śrama or Bhadrason (Bagerassan, Rennell)"—Martin's Eastern India, II, p. 340. It was also called Dadri-kshetra. Hence the fair there held every year is called Dādri-melā. See Dharmāranya 2. 2. Baroach was also the hermitage of this Rishi.

Bhṛigu-kachehha—Same as Bharukachehha, which is a corruption of Bhṛigukshetra, as it was the residence of Bhṛigu Rishi. (Bhāgavata P., Pt. 2, ch. viii; Skanda P., Revā Kh., ch. 182).

Bhṛigukshetra—Same as Bharukachehha.

Bhṛigupatana—A celebrated place of pilgrimage near Kedārnāth in Garwal.

Bhṛigupura—Same as Bharukachehha (Tawney: Prabandhachintāmaṇi, p. 136). It contains a temple of the twentieth Jaina Tirthaṅkara Suvrata.

Bhṛigu-tīrtha—Bherāghāt, containing the temple of Chausha; Yoginis, 12 miles to the west of Jabbalpur, on the Nerbada between the Marble Rocks: it is a famous place of pilgrimage (Padma P., Svarga-Kh., ch. 9; Matsya P., ch. 192).

Bhṛigu-tūga—1. A mountain in Nepal on the eastern bank of the Gaṇḍak, which was the hermitage of Bhṛigu (Varāha P., ch. 146). 2. According to Nilakaṇṭha, the celebrated commentator of the Mahābhārata, it is the Tūganātha mountain (see his commentary on v. 2, ch. 216, Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata) which is one of the Pañcha-Kedāras (see Pañcha-Kedāra).

Bhujaganagara—Same as Uragapura (Pavanadūta, v. 10).

Bhūrireshthika—Bhūriū, once an important place of a Pargana in the sub-division of Armbāg in the district of Hooghly in Bengal (Prabodhachandrodaya Nāṭaka; my "Notes on the District of Hooghly" in JASB., 1910, p. 599).

Bhushkhara—Bokhara: it was conquered by Lalitāditya, king of Kāśmīr, who ascended the throne in 697 A.D., and reigned for about 37 years (Rājatarāngiṇi, Bk. IV). The Khanat of Bokhara is bounded on the east by the Khanat of Khokand called Fergana by the ancients and also by the mountain of Badakshan, on the south by the Oxus, on the west and north by the Great Desert (Vambery's Travels in Central Asia). It was called Sogdiana.

Bibhāṇḍaka-śrama—Same as Rishyaśṛiṅga-śrama.

Biehhi—Biṭha, ten miles south-west of Allahabad, the name being found by Sir John Marshall in a seal-die at the place; in a sealing, it is called Vichhigrāma, JRAS., 1911, p. 127). See Bitabhaya-pattana.

Bidarbha—Berar, Khandesh, part of the Nizam's territory and part of the Central Provinces, the kingdom of Bhishmaka whose daughter Rukmiṇī was married to Krishṇa. Its principal towns were Kuṇḍinanagara and Bhojakaṭapura. Kuṇḍinanagara (Bidarbhanagara), its capital, was evidently Bidar. Bhojakaṭapura was Bhojapura, six miles south-east of Bhilsa in the kingdom of Bhopal. The Bhojas of the Purāṇas lived in Vidarbha. In ancient times, the country of Vidarbha included the kingdom of Bhopal and Bhilsa to the north of the Nerbada (Cunningham's Bhilsa Topes, p. 363). See Bhojakaṭapura and Kuṇḍinapura.

Bidarbhanadi—The Pain Gaṅgā.

Bidarbhanagara—Same as Kuṇḍinapura.

Bidaspes—The river Jhelum in the Punjab.

Bidegha—Same as Bideha (Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa I, 4, 1, 14).

Bideha—Tirhut, the kingdom of Rājā Janaka, whose daughter Sītā was married to Rāmachandra. Mithilā was the name of both Videha and its capital. Janakpur in the district of Darbhanga, was the capital of Rājā Janaka. Benares afterwards became the capital of Bideha (Sir Monier Monier-Williams' Modern India, p. 131). About a mile to the north of Sitāmārhi, there is a tank which is pointed out as the place where the new-born Sītā was found by Janaka while he was ploughing the land. Panaurā, three miles south-west of Sitāmārhi, also claims the honour of being the birth-place of Sītā. About six miles from Janakpur is a place called Dhenukā, (now overgrown with jungle) where Rāmachandra is said to have broken the bow of Hara. Sītā is said to have been married at Sitāmārhi. Bideha was bounded on the east by the river Kauśikī (Kusi), on the west by the river Gaṇḍaka, on the north by the Himalaya, and on the south by the Ganges. It was the country of the Vajjis at the time of Buddha (see Balsali).

Bidiśā—1. Bhilsa, in Malwa in the kingdom of Bhopal, on the river Betwa or Vetravati, about 26 miles to the north-east of Bhopal. By partitioning his kingdom, Rāmachandra gave Bidiśā to Śatrughna's son Śatrughnāti (Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara, ch. 121). It was the capital of ancient Daśārṇa mentioned in the Meghadūta (Pt. I, v. 25) of Kālidāsa. It is called Baidiśā-deśa in the Devī-Purāṇa (ch. 76) and the Rāmāyaṇa. Agnimitra, the son of Pushyamitra or Pushpamitra, the first king of the Suṅga dynasty, who reigned in Magadha in the second and third quarters of the second century B.C., was the viceroy of his father at Bidiśā or Bhilsa (Kālidāsa's Mālavikāgnimitra, Act V). Agnimitra, however, has been described as the king, and his father as his general. The topes, known by the name of Bhilsa Topes, consist of five distinct groups, all situated on low sandy hills, viz., (1) Sanchi topes, five and a half miles south-west of Bhilsa; (2) Sonāri topes, six miles to the south-west of Sanchi; (3) Satdhāra topes, three miles from Sonāri; (4) Bhojpur topes, six miles to the south south-east of Bhilsa, and Andher, nine miles to the east south-east of Bhilsa. They belong to a period ranging from 250 B.C. to 78 A.D. (Cunningham's Bhilsa Topes, p. 7). 2. The river Bidiśā has been identified with the river Bes or Besali which falls into the Betwa at Besnagar or Bhilsa (Wilson's Vishṇu P., Vol. II, 150).

Bidyanagara—1. Bijayanagar on the river Tuṅgabhadra, 36 miles north-west of Bellari, formerly the metropolis of the Brahmanical kingdom of Bijayanagar called also Karṇāṭa. It is locally called Hampi. It was founded by Saṅgama of the Yādava dynasty about 1320 A.D. According to the Mackenzie Manuscripts (see JASB., 1838, p. 174) it is said to have been founded by Narasiṅha Rayer, father of Krishṇa Rayer. Bukka and Harihara were the third and fourth kings from Saṅgama. For the genealogy of the Yādava dynasty, see Ep. Ind., vol. III, pp. 21, 22, 114 and 223. It contains the celebrated temple of Vithoba (Meadows Taylor's Architecture in Dharwar and Mysore, p. 65) and also of Virūpāksha Mahādeva. The power of the Bijayanagara kingdom was destroyed at the battle of Talikot on the bank of the Kṛishṇā in 1565. Sāyaṇāchārya, the celebrated commentator of the Vedas and brother of Mādhavāchārya, was the minister of Saṅgamarāja II, the son of Kamparāja, brother of Bukka Rai, king of Bijayanagara (Ep. Ind., vol. III, p. 23).

 2. Bijayanagara (see Padmāvatī) at the confluence of the Sindhu and the Pârâ in Malwa.
 3. Rājamahendri on the Godāvari (Journal of the Buddhist Text Society, vol. V). At this place, Chaitanya met Rāmānanda Rāya, who governed this place under Rājā Pratāparudra Deva of Orissa (Chaitanya-charitāmṛita, Madhyama, ch. 8).

Bijayanagara—Vizianagram in the Madras Presidency, visited by Chaitanya (Chaitanya-Bhāgavata, Anta-kh., ch. iii).

Bijayapura—It is said to be situated on the Ganges and was the capital of Lakshmaṇa Sena (Pavanadūta, v. 36). Hence Bijayapura was identical with Lakhnauti or Gauda which was also situated on the Ganges (see Lakshmanāvatī and Gaur in Pt. II). It was perhaps called Bijayapura from Ballāla's father Vijaya Sena who conquered Bengal. See Ballālapurī. But Vijayapura has been identified with Bijayanagara on the Ganges near Godāgāri, in Varendra or Barind, in the district of Malda in the Rajshahi Division of Bengal. The Senas, after subverting the Pāla kingdom, are believed to have made Bijayanagara their capital and subsequently removed to Lakshmaṇāvatī, which was afterwards called Gaud (JRAS., 1914, p. 101).

Bijlavada—Bezvada on the river Krishna. It was the capital of the Eastern Chālukyas.

Bikramapura—Same as Ballālapurī. It was situated in Baṅga in the kingdom of Puṇḍravaradhana (Edilpur Copperplate Inscription of Keiava Sena; Ananda Bhatta's Ballāla-charitam, Uttara Kh., ch. 1).

Bikramasīlā-vihāra—The name of this celebrated monastery is found in many Buddhist works. General Cunningham suggests the identification of Bikramasīlā with Sīlao, three miles from Bargaon (ancient Nālandā) in the sub-division Biḥar of the district of Patna (Arch. S. Rep., vol. VIII, p. 83) and six miles to the north of Rājgir. The river Pañchāna flowed by its side before. It has a very large mound of earth which is being very gradually encroached upon by the cultivators and which is perhaps the remains of a monastery. But it appears from Buddhist works that Bikramasīlā-vihāra was founded by king Dharmapāla in the middle of the eighth century A.D., on the top of a hill on the right bank of the Ganges in Biḥar: it was a celebrated seat of Buddhist learning: hence Cunningham's identification does not seem to be correct. Its identification with the Jahngira hill at Sultanganj in the district of Bhagalpur by Dr. Satishchandra Vidyābhūṣhaṇa [Bhārati (Vaiśākha) 1315] does not also appear to be correct, as there are no remains of Buddhism on that hill: it is essentially a Hindu place of worship and the place is too small for such a celebrated Buddhist monastery. But the Bikramasīlā-vihāra may be safely identified with Pātharghātā, four miles to the north of Kahalgāon (Colgong) and 24 miles to the east of Champā near Bhagalpur in the province of Biḥar (see my "Notes on Ancient Aṅga or the District of Bhagalpur," in JASB., X, 1914, p. 342). It is the Sīlā-saṅgama of Chorapañchāsikā by Chora Kavi (Franklin's Site of Ancient Palibothra), which is evidently a corruption of Bikramasīlā saṅghārāma. The place abounds with Buddhist remains, excavations and rock-cut caves of the Buddhist period. The statues of Buddha, Maitreya, and Avalokiteśvara, some of which were removed to the "Hill House" of Colgong by Mr. Barnes and which may still be found there, were beautifully sculptured and can bear comparison with the beautiful sculptures of the Nālanda monastery. As the monastery was founded in the eighth century it has not been mentioned by Hsuen Tsiang, who visited Champā in the seventh century, though he refers to the excavations which had evidently been done by the Hindus. Śrībaddha Jñānapāda was the head of the monastery at the time of Dharmapāla. It had six gates, and the six gate-keepers were Paṇḍits of India, and no one could enter the monastery without defeating these Paṇḍits in argument. Bikramasīlā was destroyed by Bakhtiyar Khilji in 1203 (see Kern: Manual of Indian Buddhism, p. 133). The Hindu Universities of Mithilā and Nadiā were established after its destruction. See Durvāsā-Asrama (see my "Bikramasīlā Monastery" in JASB., 1909, p. 1). On the top of the hill is the temple of Bateśvaranātha Mahādeva which is celebrated in this part of the country, established perhaps after the destruction of the monastery.

Binā—1. The river Kṛishṇā, the Tynna of Ptolemy. 2. Almorah in Kumaun. It is also called Benwā.

Bināsana-tīrtha—The spot in the great sandy desert in the district of Sirhind (Patiala) where the river Sarasvatī loses itself after taking a westerly course from Thanesar. See Sarasvatī.

Bināsinī—The river Banas in Gujarat on which Dīsa is situated (Bṛihadjyotiśhāra).

Bināyaka-kṣetra—Three or four miles from Dhanmaṇḍal above the Bhuvaneśvar railway station on the top of a mountain in Orissa.

Bināyaka-tīrthas—There are eight places sacred to Vināyaka or Gaṇeśa: 1. Moreśvara, six miles from Jajuri, a station of the South Marhatta Railway. 2. Ballāla, forty-six miles by boat from Bombay; it contains the temple of Vināyaka named Maruda. 3. Lenādri, fifty miles from the Teligaon station of the G. I. P. Railway. 4. Sidhatek, on the river Bhīmā, ten miles from the Diksal station of the G. I. P. Railway. 5. Ojhar containing the temple of Vināyaka Bighneśvara. 6. Sthevara called also Theura. 7. Rāñjanagrāma. 8. Mahāda. The last three are on the G. I. P. Railway. See Ashtavināyaka.

Bindhyāchala—1. The Vindhya range. The celebrated temple of Vindubāsinī (Devī-Bhāgavata, VII, 30) is situated on a part of the hills near Mirzapur. It is one of the stations of the E. I. Railway. The temple of the eight-armed Yogamāyā, which is one of the 52 Pīthas, where the toe of Śaṭ's left foot is said to have fallen, is at a short distance from the temple of Vindubāsinī (see Siva P., IV, Pt. I, ch. 21). Yogamāyā, after warning Kāmā, king of Mathurā, of the birth of his destroyer, came back to the hills, and took her abode at the site of the temple of Vindubāsinī (Skanda P., Revā Kh. ch. 55). It was, and is still a celebrated place of pilgrimage mentioned in the Kathā-sarīt-sāgara (I, ch. 2). The town of Bindhyāchala was included within the circuit of the ancient city of Pampāpura (Führer's M. A. I.). The fight between Durgā and the two brothers Sumbha and Niśumbha took place at Vindhyāchala (Vāmana P., ch. 55). See Chandapura. The goddess Vindubāsinī was widely worshipped in the seventh century, and her shrine was considered as one of the most sacred places of pilgrimage (Kathā-sarīt-sāgara, chs. 52, 54). 2. Another Bindhyāchala has been identified by Mr. Pargiter with the hills and plateau of South Mysore (Rāmāyaṇa, Kishk, ch. 48; JRAS., 1894, p. 261).

Bindhyā-pāda Parvata—The Satpura range from which rise the Tapti and other rivers (Varāha P., ch. 85). It lies between the Nerbada and the Tapti. It is the Mount Sardonys of Ptolemy containing mines of cornelian, Sardian being a species of cornelian (McCrindle's Ptolemy). On a spur of the Satpura range is a colossal rock-cut Jaina image of the Digambara sect called Bawangaj, about 73 feet in height on the Nerbada in the district of Burwani, about 100 miles from Indore (JASB., XVII, p. 918). See Bravana-Belgola.

Bindubāsinī—The celebrated place of pilgrimage in the district of Mirzapur in the U. P. See Vindhyachala (Vāmana P., ch. 45).

Bindu-sara—1. A sacred pool situated on the Rudra-Himālaya, two miles south of Gaṅgotri, where Bhagiratha is said to have performed asceticism for bringing down the goddess Gaṅgā from heaven (Rāmāyaṇa, I, 43, and Matsya P., ch. 121). In the Brahmaṇḍa-Purāṇa (ch. 51), this tank is said to be situated at the foot of the Gauḍa Parvata on the north of the Kailāsa range, which is called Maināka-Parvata in the Mahābhārata (Sabhā, ch. 3). 2. In Sitpur (Siddhapura in Gujarat) north-west of Ahmedabad: it was the hermitage of Kardama Rishi and birth-place of Kapila (Bhāgavata P., Skanda III). See Siddhapura. 3. A sacred tank called Bindusāgara and also Gosāgara at Bhuvaneśvara in Orissa (Padma P.) Mahādeva caused the water of this tank to rise from Pātāla by means of his Trisūla (trident) in order to quench the thirst of Bhagavatī when she was fatigued with her fight with the two demons of Bhuvaneśvara, named Kīrti and Bāsa (Bhuvaneśvara-Mahātmya).

Biṅgara—Ahmednagar, seventy-one miles from Poona, which was founded by Ahmed Nizam Shah in 1494.

Binjapūra—Katak in Orissa (Ap. Ind., vol. III, pp. 323—359; JASB., 1905, p. 1).

Biṇṣā—The Bias, the Hypæsis of the Greeks. The origin of the name of this river is related in the Mahābhārata (Adj, ch. 179). Rishi Vasiṣṭha, being weary of life on account of the death of his sons killed by Viśvāmitra, tied his hands and feet with chords, and threw himself into the river, which afraid of killing a Brāhmaṇa, burst the bonds (pāśa) and came to the shore. The hot springs and village of Vasiṣṭha Muni are situated opposite to Monali (JASB., vol. XVII, p. 209).

Birajā-kṣetra—A country which stretches for ten miles around Jāipur on the bank of the river Baitaraṇī in Orissa (Mahābhārata, Vana P., ch. 85; Brahma P., ch. 42). It is also called Gadā-kṣetra, sacred to the Śāktas (Kapila-saṃhitā).

Birāṭa—The country of Jaipur. The town of Birāṭa or Bairāt, 105 miles to the south of Delhi and 40 miles to the north of Jaipur (Cunningham, Arch. S. Rep., II, p. 244) was the ancient capital of Jaipur or Matsyadeśa. It was the capital of Virāṭa Rājā, king of the Matsya-deśa, where the five Pāṇḍavas lived in secrecy for one year. It is a mistake to identify Birāṭa with Dinsajpur whereat Kāntanagara, Virāṭa's Uttara-gogriha (northern cowshed) is shown, the Dakṣhiṇa-gogriha (southern cowshed) being shown at Midnapur. This identification is not countenanced by the Mahābhārata, which relates that Yudhiṣṭhira selected a kingdom in the neighbourhood of Hastināpura as his place of concealment, from which he could watch the movements of his enemy Duryodhana, (Mbh., Virāṭa, ch. 1, and Sabhā, ch. 30). See Matsyadeśa. The Pāṇḍu hill at Bairāṭa, which has a cave called Bhimaguphā, contains an inscription of Aśoka (Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, vol. 1, p. 22).

Viśākhā—Oudh was called by this name during the Buddhist period. Viśākhā was the capital of Fa Hian's Sha-chi or Sāketa. Dr. Hoey, however, identifies it with Pasha (Pi-so-kia of Hiuen Tsiang) in the district of Gonda in Oudh, near the junction of the Sarajāū and the Gogra (JASB., vol. LXIX, p. 74). It has been identified by Dr. Burgess with Lucknow (Cave Temples of India, p. 44).

Viśākhā-pattana—Vizagapatam in the Madras Presidency.

Viśālā—1. Beśāḍ, in the district of Mozaffarpur in the Bihar Province, the Baiśālī of the Buddhist period (see Baiśālī). At the time of the Rāmāyaṇa (Ādi, ch. 45), the town was situated on the northern bank of the Ganges and not on the Gaṇḍak; at the time of Kshemendra in the 11th century, it was on the river Balgumati (Avā. Kālp., ch. 39). 2. Ujin, the capital of Avanti (Meghadūta I, 31; Hemakośha; Skanda P., Revā kh., ch. 47). 3. An affluent of the Gaṇḍak in Baiśālī (Mbh., Vana, ch. 84).

Viśālā-badārī—See Badarikārama.

Viśālā-śhātra—Same as Viśālā. Hajipur was included in the kingdom of Baiśālā. Rāmachandra, Lakshmana and Viśvāmitra, on their way to Mithilā, are said to have halted at Hajipur for one night on the site of the present temple called Rāmachandā, which contains the image of Rāmachandra and the impression of his feet. Haji Shamsuddin, king of Bengal, established his capital at Hajipur in the middle of the 14th century, and from him the name of Hajipur has been derived. It still contains a stone mosque said to have been built by him close to the Sonapur Ghat. The celebrated Rājā Todar Mal lived at Hajipur when he made the settlement of Bengal and Bihar and is said to have resided in the fort (killa), the ruins of which still exist and contain the Nepalese temple. Sonpur, situated at the confluence of the Gaṇḍak and the Ganges, was also included in Baiśālī-śhātra. It was at Sonpur (Gajendramoksha-tirtha) that Vishnu is said to have released the elephant from the clutches of the alligator, the fight between whom has been described in the Varāha-Purāṇa (ch. 144). They fought for five thousand years all along the place from a lake called Kāśkḍā-Tālāo, five miles to the north-west of Sonpur, to the junction of the Gaṇḍak and the Ganges. Vishnu, after releasing the elephant, established the Mahādeva Hariharanātha and worshipped him. Rāmachandrac, on his way to Janakapur, is said to have stopped for three nights on the site of the temple at Sonpur; hence in his honour, a celebrated fair is held there every year.

Viśālā—A branch of the Nerbada (Kāśmā P. ch. 39).

Bishnugriha—Tamluk. Same as Tamralipta (Hema-kosha).

Viśvāmitra—The river Viśvāmitrā in Gujarāt on which Baroda is situated (Mahābhārata Bhishma, ch. 9).

Viśvāmitra-śrama—Buxar, in the district of Shahabad in Bihar. It was the hermitage of Rishi Viśvāmitra, where Rāmachandra is said to have killed the Rākhaśi Tādakā. The Charitra-vana at Buxar is said to have been the hermitage of the Rishi (Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, ch. 26), and the western side of Buxar near the river Thora was the ancient Siddhāśrama, the reputed birth-place of Vāmana Deva (see Siddhāśrama). The hermitage of Rishi Viśvāmitra is also pointed out as Devakūṇḍa, 25 miles north-west of Gayā. Same as Bedagaibhapuri. The hermitage of the Rishi was also situated on the western bank of the Sarasvatī opposite to Sthānu-tirtha in Kurukshetra (Mbh., Śalya, ch. 43). It was also situated on the river Kauśiki, modern Kusi.

Bitabhaya-pattana—Bithā, eleven miles south-west of Allahabad on the right bank of the Jamuna (Vira-charitra of the Jainas quoted by General Cunningham in Arch. S. Rep., vol. 3). But from seals found by Sir John Marshall at Bhiṣā, the ancient name of the place appears to be Vichhi and Vichhi-grāma, and not Bitabhaya-pattana. (JRAS., 1911, p. 127).

Bitarsā—Same as Bitastā.

Bitastā—The river Jhelum, the Hydaspes of the Greeks (Rigveda X, 75), and Bitarsā of the Buddhists ("Questions of King Milinda," SBE., p. xxliv).

Bodha—The country round Indraprastha (q.v.) which contained the celebrated Tirtha called Nigamod-bodha, perhaps briefly called Bodha (Mbh., Bhishma, ch. 9; Padma P., Uttara, ch. 66).

Bolor—Baltistan, or little Thibet, a small state north of Kāśmir to distinguish it from Middle Thibet or Ladakh and Great Thibet or Southern Tartary.

Brahma—A country in Eastern India, perhaps Burma (Rāmāyaṇa, Kishkindhā, ch. 40).

Brahmagiri—1. A mountain in the Nasik district, Bombay, near Tryambaka, in which the Godāvari has its source (Padma P., Uttara, ch. 62). 2. A mountain in Coorg, in which the Kāveri has its source (see Kāveri).

Brahmakunda—The Kunda from which the river Brahmaputra issues: it is a place of pilgrimage (see Lohitya).

Brahmanada—The river Brahmaputra (Bṛihat-Dharma-Purāṇa, Madhya kh., ch. 10).

Brahmanāla—Maṇikargikā in Benares.

Bṛahmaṇī—The river Bahmni in Orissa (Mbh., Bhishma, ch. 9; Padma P., Svarga, ch. 3).

Brahmapura—Garwal and Kumaon (Bṛihat-Saṃhitā, ch. 14).

Brahmaputra—Same as Lohitya. See Brahma P., ch. 64.

Brahmarshi—The country between Brahmāvarṭta and the river Jamuna: it comprised Kurukshetra, Matsya, Pañchāla and Śūrasena (Manu-Saṃhitā, ch. 2, v. 19).

Brahmasara—1. Same as Rāmahrada (Mbh., Anuśāsana, 25). 2. In Gaya (Agni P., ch. 115) see Dharmarāyaṇa. 3. Same as Brahmatirtha (Padma P., Śrīṣṭi, ch. 19).

Brahma-tirtha—Pushkara lake, near Ajmir in Rajputana (Kārma P., Pt. II, 37).

Brahmāvarṭta—1. The country between the rivers Sarasvatī and Drishadvatī, where the Aryans first settled themselves. From this place they occupied the countries known as Brahmarshi-deśa (Manu-Saṃhitā, ch. 2). It was afterwards called Kurukshetra. It has been identified generally with Sirhind (Rapson's Ancient India, p. 51). Its capital was Karavirapura on the river Drishadvatī according to the Kālikā Purāṇa, chs. 48, 49, and Barhishmatī according to the Bhāgavata, III, 22. 2. A landing ghāt on the Ganges at Bithur in the district of Cawnpur, called the Brahmāvarṭta-tirtha, which is one of the celebrated places of pilgrimage.

Braja—Purāṇa Gokul, or Mahāvana, a village in the neighbourhood of Mathurā across the Jamuna, where Kṛishṇa was reared by Nanda during his infancy (Bhāgavata P., X, ch. 3). The name of Braja was extended to Brindāvana and the neighbouring villages, the scene of Kṛishṇa's early life and love. At Mahāvana is shown the lying-in room in which Mahāmāyā was born and Kṛishṇa substituted for her. This room and Nanda's house are situated on two high mounds of earth. Nanda's house contains a large colonnaded hall in which are shown the cradle of Kṛishṇa and the spots where Putanā was killed and where Śiva appeared to see the infant god. At a short distance from the house of Nanda are the mortar which was overturned by the infant Kṛishṇa, and the place which contained the twin Arjuna trees broken by Kṛishṇa. Gokul or new Gokul was founded by Ballabhā-chāryya in imitation of Mahāvana or Purāṇa (old) Gokul and contains also the same famous spots that are shown in Mahāvana. The shrine of Syām Lalā at new Gokula is believed to mark the spot where Yaśodā, the wife of Nanda, gave birth to Māyā or Yoga-nidrā, substituted by Vāsudeva for the infant Kṛishṇa. Nanda's palace at Gokul (new Gokul) was converted into a mosque at the time of Aurangzeb. Outside the town is Putnām-khar, where Kṛishṇa is said to have killed Putanā. Growse identifies Mahāvana with Klisoboras of the Greeks and supposes that the modern Braja was the ancient Anupa-deśa (Growse's Mathurā); Aṣṭagrāma was the birth-place of Rādhikā (Adi P., ch. 12). See Gokula and Braja-maṇḍala.

Braja-maṇḍala—It comprises an area of 84 kos containing many villages and towns and sacred spots associated with the adventures of Kṛishṇa and Rādhikā. The 12 Vanas and 24 Upa-Vanas are specially visited by pilgrims in their perambulation commencing from Mathurā in the month of Bhādra. At the village of Maholi is Madhuvana, the stronghold of the Daitya named Madhu; at Tarsi is Tālayana where Balarāma defeated the demon Dhenuka; at Rādhākūṇḍa are two sacred pools called Śyāmakūṇḍa and Rādhākūṇḍa, where Kṛishṇa expiated his sin after he had slain the bull Ariṣṭa; at the town of Gobardhan, which contains the celebrated hill of that name on the bank of the tank called Mānas Gaṅgā, is the ancient temple of Hari Deva; at Paitho, the people of Braja came to take shelter from the storms of Indra under the hill uplifted by Kṛishṇa (see Govardhana); at Ganṭholi, the marriage knot was tied which confirmed the union of Rādhā and Kṛishṇa; at Kambana, the demon Aghāsura was killed by Kṛishṇa; at Barsana, Rādhikā was brought up by her parents Vṛishabhānu and Kīrati; at Rithora was the home of Chandrāvali, Rādhikā's faithful attendant; at Nandagāon was the abode of Nanda and Yaśodā; at Pānsarovara, Kṛishṇa drove his cattle morning and evening to water; at Charan Pāhāḥ, Indra did homage to Kṛishṇa; at Chirghāt on the Jamuna, Kṛishṇa stole the bathers' clothes; at Vaka-vana, Vakāsura was slain by Kṛishṇa; at Bhātrond, some Brāhmanas' wives supplied Kṛishṇa and his companions with food (rice), notwithstanding that their husbands had refused to do so; at Bhāṇḍira-vana, Balarāma vanquished the demon Pralamba; at Raval, Rādhikā was born and passed the first years of infancy before her parents went to live at Barshāna; at Brahmāṇḍa Ghāt, beyond the village of Hathora, Kṛishṇa showed Yaśodā the universe within his mouth; at Mahāvana, Kṛishṇa passed his infancy and killed Putanā; at Mathurā, he killed Kāmpa and rested at Bīrānta Ghāt (Bhāgavata P., and Growse's "Country of Braj" in JASB., 1871). See Braja.

Briddha-kāsi—A celebrated place of pilgrimage now called Pudukeli-Gopuram in the presidency of Madras. It was visited by Chaitanya, who defeated here the Buddhists in controversy (Śyāmlāl Goswāmī's Gaura-sundara).

Brīkashthala—At a short distance to the south of Hastināpura (Mbh., Udyoga, ch. 86).

Brīkshakhaṇḍa—See Chitābhāmi.

Brīndāvana—Brīndāban in the district of Mathurā, where Kṛishṇa showed to the world examples of transcendental love through the Gopīs. The original image of Govindajī was removed to Jaipur and that of Madanamohana to Karnali in anticipation of the raid of Aurangzeb. The splendid and magnificent pyramidal old temple of Govindaji with its elegant carvings and sculptures was built by Man Singh in the thirty-fourth year of Akbar's reign (Growse's Mathurā and Brahmavaivarta P., ch. 17 and Bhāgavata P., X, ch. 12). The Nidhuvana and Nikūṅjavana, the celebrated bowers of love, Pulina, the place of the rāsamandala, the Bastraharasa-ghāṭ, the Kāliya-daha-ghāṭ,—all situated in Brindāvana were the scenes of Kṛishṇa's love and adventures. Brindāvana appears to have attained celebrity at the time of Kālidāsa (Raghuvamśa, VI, 50). Brindāvana was visited by the poet Bilhanā who composed his Bikramāṅkadeva-charita about A.D. 1085 (see canto XVIII, v. 87). The cenotaph of Hariḷās is situated in his hermitage, whence Akbar in his visit to Brindāvana took away his disciple, the celebrated musician Tānasena to his court. The predominance of the Buddhist religion for several centuries served to efface all traces of the sacred localities of Brindāvana, but were again restored by the explorations of Rūpa and Sanātana, the celebrated followers of Chaitanya. But the identification of modern Brindāvan with the Brindāvana of the Purāṇas is extremely doubtful for the following reasons: (1) Modern Brindāvan is six miles from Mathurā, whereas it took Akura the whole day from sunrise to sunset to drive from Brindāvana to Mathurā in a car drawn by swift horses (Vishnu P., Pt. V, ch. 18, vs. 12 and 33, and ch. 19, v. 9, Bhāgavata P., Pt. X, ch. 39, v. 30, and ch. 41, v. 4). (2) Nanda, the foster-father of Kṛishṇa, removed from Gokula, which is six miles from Mathurā, across the Jamuna to Brindāvana to escape molestations from the myrmidons of Kāṁsa, king of Mathurā (Vishnu P., Pt. V, ch. vi, vs. 23, 25, and Bhāgavata P., Pt. X, ch. xi, vs. 10—14). It is therefore not likely that he should select for his sojourn modern Brindāvana which is also six miles from Mathurā and on the same side of the Jamunā, leaving the natural barrier of a river. (3) Brindāvan does not contain any mountain, whereas ancient Brindāvana is described as mountainous (Bhāgavata P., Pt. X, ch. xi, v. 14). (4) Ancient Brindāvana and Mathurā seem to have been situated on the opposite sides of the Yamunā (Vishnu P., Part V, ch. 18, v. 33, and Bhāgavata P., Pt. X, ch. 39, v. 34).

Brishabhānupura—Same as Barshāna.

Britraghni—The Vātrak, a tributary of the Sabarmati in Gujarāt (Padma P., Uttara, ch. 60; Mārkaṇḍ P., ch. 57). Same as Beiravati (2) and Bartraghni (cf. Padma P., Uttara, chs. 53 and 60).

Buddhavana—Budhain, about six miles north of Tapovan in the district of Gaya.

Bukephala—Jalālpur in the Punjab (Cunningham's Anc. Geo., 176, 177). This was the place where Alexander the Great's favourite horse was interred. For Alexander's route to India, see JASB., X (1842), "Note on the Passes to Hindoostan from the West and North-west" by H. T. Prinsep; JASB., XXI (1852), p. 214.

Byāghrapura—1. Same as Koli (MB., p. 139). 2. Same as Bedagarbhapuri (Skanda P., Sāta-Saṁhitā, IV, Yajña kh., ch. 24).

Byāghrasara—Buxar in the district of Shahabad. See Bedagarbhapuri.

Byāsa-ārama—Manal, a village near Badrināth in Garwal in the Himalayas. It was the hermitage of Rishi Vyāsa, the author of the Mahābhārata, and the reputed author of the Purāṇas.

Byāsa-kāsi—Rāmpagar, opposite to Benares across the Ganges. The temple dedicated to Vyāsa Rishi is situated within the precincts of the palace of the Mahārājā of Benares (Skanda P., Kāsi-kh.).

C

Chaitiyagiri—Same as Chetiyagiri.

Chakranagara—Koljhar, 17 miles north-east of Wardha in the Central Provinces (Cousen's Arch. S. Rep., "Central Provinces and Berar," p. 10; Śīta P., Sanat-kumāra-Saṃhitā, ch. 17). It is perhaps the Chakrāṅkanagara of the Padma Purāna, Pātāla kh. ch., 13).

Chakrāṅkanagara—See Chakranagara.

Chakra-tirtha—1. In Kuroksbetra, same as Rāma-kṛda. 2. In Prabhāsa in Gujarāt on the Gomati (Devārakā-māhātmya). 3. Six miles from the village called Tryambaka, which is near the source of the Godāvari. 4. In Benares: a kuṇḍa or reservoir enclosed by an iron railing in the Maṇikarṇikā-ghāt. 5. In Rāmeśvara (Skanda P., Brahma kh., Setu Mahāt., ch. 3).

Chakshu—The river Oxus or Amu Daria (Matsya P., ch. 120; Asiatic Researches, VIII, p. 330). The Brahmāṇḍa P. (ch. 51) mentions the names of the countries through which it flows. It is mentioned by Bhāskarāchāryya as a river which proceeds to Katumāla (Siddhānta-śīromāṇī, Bhubana-kosha, 37, 38). The Mahābhārata, Bhīshma P., ch. 11, says that it flows through Śāka-dvīpa. It rises in the Pamir lake, called also the Sari-kul or yellow lake, at a distance of 300 miles to the south of the Jaxartes (McCrindle's Ptolemy, p. 278).

Chakshushmatī—Same as Ikshumatī (cf. Varāha P., ch. 85 with Matsya P., ch. 113).

Chamatkārapura—Ānandapura or Baranagara in the district of Ahmadabad in the province of Gujarat, anciently called Ānartta-deśa, where Līṅga worship was first established and the first Līṅga or phallic image of Mahādeva was called Achalesvara. But according to other Purāṇas, Līṅga worship was first established at Devadāru-vana or Dāru or Daruka-vana in Garwal (see Devadāruvana). Chamatkārapura was also called Nagara, the original abode of the Nāgara Brāhmins (Skanda P. Nagara kh., chs. 1—13, 114). See Haṭaka-kṣhetra and Ānandapura. The Nāgara Brāhmins are said to have invented the Nāgri alphabet [see my paper on the "Origin of the Bengali Alphabet (Baṅga-lipir utpatti)" in the Suvarṇabanik-Samāchār, Vol. II.] See Dāruvana.

Champā—1. Same as Champāpuri. 2. Siam, according to Hsien Tsiang: it was the country of the Yavanas. (Beal's Life of Hsien Tsiang: Introduction). 3. Tonquin and Cambodia (Col. Yule's Marco Polo, Vol. II, p. 255 note). 4. The river Champā was between the countries of Aṅga and Magadha (Champeyya Jātaka in the Jātakas, Cam. Ed. IV, p. 281). 5. Champā was also the name of the territory now called Chambā which comprised the valleys of the sources of the Ravi between Kangra, the ancient Trigarta, and Kāshthavāṭa (Dr. Stein, Rājatarāṅgiṇī, II, p. 431).

Champakā—Same as Champāranya: 5 miles to the north of Rajim in Central India. It was the capital of Rājā Haṇṣadhvaṇa (Jaimini-bhārata, ch. 17).

Champakāranya—Champaran: see Champāranya (Padma P., Svarga, ch. 19).

Champā-nadi—The river formed the boundary between Aṅga and Magadha (Champeyya Jātaka in the Jātakas, Cam. Ed., IV, No. 506). It was a place of pilgrimage (Padma P., Śrīṣṭī, ch. 11).

Champānagara—1. Chāndniā or Chāndmaya, after the name of Chānd Sadāgar, about 12 miles north of Bogra, and five miles north of Mahāsthānagar in the district of Bogra in Bengal. It is said to have been the residence of Chānd Sadāgar of the famous tale of Manasār-Bhāṣān, and it is associated with the story of the devotion of Behulā to her husband Nakhindhara, the youngest son of Chānd Sadāgar. There are two marshes called Gori and Sauri, on either side of the village, which are said to be the remains of two great rivers. It is now situated on the river Karatoyā (Hunter's Statistical Account of Bengal, vol. VIII, p. 196). The Kālidaha Sāgar, a large lake outside the rampart of Mahāsthāna fort is the Kālidaha of the story [JASB., 1878, p. 94 (Beveridge)]. But Chānd Sadāgar's residence is also pointed out at Champānagara near Bhagalpur, where a fair is held every year in honour of Behulā and Nakhindhara. See, however, Ujāni. 2. Same as Champāpuri.

Champāpuri—Same as Champā. Champānagara, situated at a distance of about four miles to the west of Bhagalpur. It was also called Mālinī and Champā-mālinī (Matsya P., ch. 48; Hemakosha). It was the capital of ancient Aṅga, of which the king was Rājā Romapāda or Lomapāda who adopted Daśaratha's daughter Śāntā (Rāmāyaṇa, Ādi, ch. 10). Lomapāda's great-grandson Champā is said to have founded the town of Champānagara which was formerly called Mālinī, but it is mentioned in the Mahābhārata (Vana P., ch. 112) that Champā was the capital of Lomapāda. At the time of the Mahābhārata it was the capital of Karṇa, the ally of Duryodhana. It is also described as a place of pilgrimage in the Mahābhārata (Vana P., ch. 85). The Karṇagad which is included in Champānagara, contains the remains of a fort which is pointed out as the fort of Karṇa, who was brought up at this place. But it has been thought by some that Karṇagad in Champānagara and Karṇachandā in Monghir have been named after Karṇasena, king of Karṇasuvarṇa, who had conquered Aṅga and Baṅga. There is a temple of Mahādeva called Manaskāmanānātha, which is said to have been set up by Rājā Karṇa, but which appears to have been built on the site of an ancient Buddhist temple. Just outside the temple on the southern side there are many Buddhist statues. The vestiges of the ramparts of the fort on all sides still exist. Champānagara was visited by Hiuen Tsiang in the seventh century as a Buddhist place of pilgrimage. Champa was the birth-place of "Bīraja-Jina," the author of the celebrated Buddhist work Laṅkāvatāra Sūtra (ch. 10), and also that of Pālakāpya Muni, the author of the Hastyāyurveda (a treatise on the diseases of elephants). Sona Kolavisa, the author of one of the Theragāthās was a resident of Champā (Mahāvagga, V., 1). Many Buddhist statues and remains of ancient pillars are still found scattered over the town. The remains of the mound, on which the surrounding wall of the town was situated, as mentioned by Hiuen Tsiang, may still be seen close to the Nathnagar Railway Station. Spence Hardy, on the authority of Csoma Kőrösi, states that a king of Aṅga (Brahmadatta), whose capital was Champā, had conquered Magadha before the birth of Buddha, but when Bimbisāra, then a prince, grew up, he invaded Aṅga and caused the king to be slain : after which he resided at Champā till the death of his father Kaśatrañjas, when he returned to Rājagṛha (Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, p. 186, second ed., Duff's Chronicle, p. 5). Since that time, Aṅga remained subject to Magadha. Champāpuri is also a very sacred place to the Jains, inasmuch as it was visited by Mahāvīra, the last Tirthaṅkara who spent here three Parjjuṣanas (rainy season retirement) (Kalpasūtra, ch. vi), and it is the birth-place and the place of death of Bāsupūjya, the twelfth Tirthaṅkara, whose symbol is the buffalo. He was the son of Bāsupūjya and Jayā (Buchanan's Observations on the Jains : Asiat. Res., IX, 30). The temple of Bāsupūjya was erected by a Jaipur chief, Sungree Siree Dhata and his wife Sungvin Siree Surjaice in the Yudhiṣṭhira era 2559 (see the Inscription in Major Francklin's Site of Ancient Palibothra, pp. 16, 17 : Yudhiṣṭhira Era 2559 corresponds to 541 B.C.). At Nathnagar, which is a quarter (maḥallā) of Champānagara exists this beautiful temple of the Digambara sect, which is dedicated to Bāsupūjya, who is said to have lived and died at the site of this temple. From the inscriptions on some Jaina images exhumed from the neighbourhood of an old Jaina temple at Ajmer, it appears that these images, which were of Bāsupājya, Mallinātha, Pārśvanātha, and Vardhamāna were dedicated in the thirteenth century A.D., i.e., ranging from Samvat 1239 to 1247 (JASB., 1838, p. 52). The Uvāsagadasāo mentions that a temple called Chaitya Punnabhadda existed at Champā at the time of Sudharman, one of the eleven disciples of Mahāvira who succeeded as the head of the Jaina sect on his death (Hoernle's Uvāsagadasāo, p. 2, notes, Jñātādharma-sūtrapāṭha). The town was visited by Sudharman, the head of the Jaina hierarchy, at the time of Kuṇika or Ajātaśatru who came barefooted to see the Gaṇadhara outside the city where he had taken up his abode. Sudharman's successor Jambu and Jambu's successor Prabhava also visited Champā, and Prabhava's successor Sayambhava lived at this city where he composed the Daśavaikālika Sūtra containing in ten lectures all the essence of the sacred doctrines of Jainism (Hemchandra's Sthavirāvalī or Parīśiṣṭaparvāṃ, Cantos IV, V). After the death of Bimbisāra, Kuṇika or Ajātaśatru made Champā his capital, but after his death, his son Udāyin transferred the seat of government to Pāṭaliputra (Canto VI). On the northern side of this old temple of Bāsupājya, there is another temple dedicated to him, but it has been newly built. At Champānagara proper, there is another temple of the Jainas belonging to the Svetāmbara sect, containing the images of many Tirthaṅkaras. Champā has been described in the Daśatamāra-charita as abounding in rogues. From the Chāmpaka-Śreṣṭhī-Kathā, a Jaina work, it appears that the town was in a very flourishing condition. In the opening lines, the castes and trades of the town are enumerated. There were perfumers, spice-sellers, sugar-candy sellers, jewellers, leather-tanners, garland-makers, carpenters, goldsmiths, weavers, washermen, etc. The name of the king is mentioned as Sāmanta Pāla : his minister was Briddhadatta (Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts by M. M. Haraprasāda Śāstri, 1892). Champānagara is also traditionally the abode of Chānd Sadāgar, the story of whose son Lakhindara and his wife Behulā is so graphically related in the poem called Manasār-Bhāṣān. The place where he was bitten by the snake and the Ghāt where his dead body was launched are still pointed out close to the East Indian Railway bridge. It is still called Behulā Ghāt and is situated at the junction of the Ganges and the Chandan, where Behulā is said to have put the corpse of her deceased husband on a raft and carried it to different places till it was miraculously restored to life. A great fair is held here every year in the month of Bhādra in honour of Behulā, the devoted wife of Lakhindara. The Ganges flowed by the side of the town, but, within the course of the last fifty years, it has receded about a mile to the north. Of all the places claimed as the residence of Chānd Sadāgar, (as Champā in the district of Burdwan near the river Gangur or Behulānadi and Chandnia or Chandmaya in the district of Bogra), this place has the most preferential claim, inasmuch as it is situated on the Ganges, on which the story and the tradition place the Champānagara of Chānd Sadāgar, and there was, according to the Hindu and Buddhist works, no other Champānagara on the Ganges except the Champānagara near Bhagalpur. At the time of Buddha, Champā was one of the six great cities of India, for Ānanda exhorted him to die in one of these great cities : Champā, Rājagriha, Srāvastī, Sāketa, Kauśāmbī and Benares, and not in the insignificant town of Kusināra (Mahāparinibbāna-suttanta, ch. V). Subhadrīnī, the mother of Asoka, was born at Champā. Her father was a poor Brāhman, who took her to Pāṭaliputra and presented her to Bindusāra called also Amitraghāta, king of Magadha (347 to 319 B.C.), in consequence of a prognostication that she would be a great queen. The jealous queens, however, employed her in menial work, but she attracted the attention of the king, who made her his queen. She became the mother of Aśoka and Vitrāśoka. The artificial lake excavated by Queen Gaggara mentioned in Buddhist works, containing groves of Champaka trees on its banks, where wandering monks (Pabbajikas) used to reside at the time of Buddha (Rhys Davids' Buddhist India; Mahāvagga, IX, 1; Sonadaṇḍa Sutta, I, with Dr. Rhys Davids' notes), may be identified with the large silted-up tank now called Sarovara, from the depth of which Buddhist statues were recovered. Champā was surrounded by groves of Champaka trees even at the time of the Mahābhārata (Anuśāsana P. ch. 42). The king of Champāpuri had two beautiful palaces, one called Gaṇḍalātā, at Kuruchattar, now called Karpāt, seven miles east of Bhagalpur at the confluence of the Ganges and the Jamuna near the Gogha-nālā, and the other called Kridāsthali near Pātharghāṭā was situated at the confluence of the Ganges and the Kosi (Franklin's Site of Palibothra, pp. 28, 29. See my "Notes on Ancient Aṅga" in JASB., X (1914).

Champāranya.—1. Five miles to the north of Rajim in Central India. It is a place of pilgrimage to the Buddhists and Jains. Same as Champaka of the Jaimini Bhārata.
2. Champaran in the Patna division (Śaktisaṅgama Tantra, ch. 7).

Champavati.—1. Champauti, the ancient capital of Kumaon. It was also called Champā-tirtha and mentioned after Badarekā (Mbh., Vana, ch. 85). For the history of the kings of Kumaon, see JASB., 1844, p. 887. 2. Somylla of the Periplus of the Erythraean Sea and Saimur of the Arabs: modern Chaul, 25 miles south of Bombay. It is now also called Revadaṇḍa (ancient Revāvantī of the inscription, JRAS., Vol. III, p. 386) or Revatīkshetra. It is situated in the Kolaba district in Northern Konkan, and is said to have been the capital of an independent kingdom situated in Paraśurāmakṣetra. Perhaps it is the Champāvati of the Skanda P. (Brahmottara kh., ch. xvi). Chaul was a noted place of trade (Da Cunha's History of Chaul and Bassein, pp. 3—11).

Chandana.—1. The river Sabarmati in Gujarāt (Padma P.). 2. The river Chandan in the Santal Pargana in the presidency of Bengal; it falls into the Ganges (Rāmāyaṇa, Kishkindhā, XL, 20).

Chand nagiri.—The Malaya-giri—the Malabar Ghats (Trikāṇḍaśeṣa).

Chandanāvati.—An ancient name of Baroda in the Gaekwar's territory (Balfour's Cyclopædia of India, Vol. I, p. 138).

Chandanivati.—See Chandrapura (Jaimini-Bhārata, ch. 54).

Chandapura.—Chayenpur, five miles to the west of Bhabuā in the district of Shahabad in Behar. The celebrated battle described in the Chandī between Kālī and the two kings Śumbha and Niśumbha, is said to have been fought at this place. The Mārkaṇḍeya P. (ch. 85), however, places the scene of the battle in the Himalayas; the Vāmana P. (ch. 55) places it at Bindhyāchala. The name of Chandapura is derived from the name of one of the two brothers, Chaṇḍa and Muṇḍa, who were the generals of the kings. The Chaumukhi Mahādeva and Durgā in a temple at Muṇḍesvari are said to have been established by the other brother Muṇḍa. Muṇḍesvari is seven miles south-west of Bhabuā; the temple, according to Dr. Bloch, is very old, the carving being of the Gupta style (Bloch's Arch. Rep., 1902). The temple bears a date which is equivalent to A.D. 635 (Sir John Marshall's Arch. S. Rep.—Eastern Circle, 1913-14, p. 38). The Vāmana P. (chs. 19 and 55), however, says that they were the generals of Mahiṣāsura and were killed by the goddess Bindubāsinī on the Vindhyā Mountain.

Chandalgada.—Chunar. The name of Chandalgada has been derived from the Chandela, a tribe of Kahattriyas who had established their sway between Mirzapur and the districts of Shahabad. They originally came from Mahoba (modern Bundelkhand) and took possession of the fort after the Pāla Rājās. See Charapātri.

- Chandrabhāgā—1. The Chinab—the Acesines of the Greeks, or rather the united streams of the Jhelum and the Chinab. It has its source in a lake called Lohitya-sarovara (Kālikā P., ch. 82), in Lahoul, south of Ladakh, or Middle Tibet. 2. The river Bhīmā, a branch of the Krishnā.
- Chandradityapura—Chandor in the Nasik district; it was the capital of Drishaprahāra, a king of the Yādava dynasty. (Dr. Bhandarkar's Hist. of the Dekkan, Sec. XIV.)
- Chandragiri—Near Belgola, not far from Seringapatam, sacred to the Jainas. The ancient name of the place was Deya Durga. (JASB., 1838, p. 520.) See Arbuda.
- Chandrapura—Chāndā in the Central Provinces: it was the capital of king Hapsadhvaja (Rice's Mysore Inscriptions: Introd. XXIX), but in the Jaimini-Bhārata (ch. 17), Hapsadhvaja is said to have been king of Champaka-nagari. Chandrapura or Chandravati or Chandanāvati was two Yojanas or two days' journey from Kuntalakapura or Kautalakapura (Jaimini-Bhārata, ch. 53). See Kuntalakapura.
- Chandrapuri—1. Same as Chandwar (Varāha P., ch. 122). 2. Same as Chandrikāpuri and Chandripura, the name of Śrāvastī or Sahet-mahet in the Gonda district in Oudh.
- Chandrasekhara—See Chaṭṭala.
- Chandra-tīrtha—See Kāveri.
- Chandravati—Chanderi in the Lalitpur district, Central India, Sandravatis of the Greeks, and Chandbari of the Prithvirāj Rāso. It was the capital of Siśupala, king of Chedi (P. Mukherji's Lalitpur).
- Chandravati—1. The river Chāndan or Andhelā which falls into the Ganges, near Champānagar in the district of Bhagalpur. It is the Andomatis of Arrian. See Andha. 2. Jhalrapattan in Rajputana (Tod's Rajasthan, II, p. 1602). 3. Near Abu (Bomb. Gaz., Vol. I, Pt. I, p. 185.)
- Chandrikā—The river Chandrabhāgā (Chenab).
- Chandrikāpuri—Śrāvastī or Sahet-mahet in the district of Gonda in Oudh: it was the birth-place of Sambhavanātha, the third Tīrthaṅkara, and of Chandraprabhānātha, the eighth Tīrthaṅkara of the Jainas. There is a Jaina temple dedicated to Sobhānātha, which name is a corruption of Sambhavanātha (see Śrāvastī).
- Chandripura—Same as Chandrikāpuri.
- Chandwar—Firozabad, near Agra, where in 1193 A. D. Shahabuddin Ghorī defeated Jaya Chandra, king of Kanauj (Thornton's Gazetteer). Chandwar is evidently a contraction of Chandrapura (Varāha P., ch. 122).
- Charanādri—Chunar in the district of Mirzapur (Śaktisāṅgama Tantra, vii). The hill-fort of Chunar was at one time considered one of the most impregnable forts in India. It was built by the Pāla Rājās, who reigned over Bengal and Behar from the middle of the eighth to the twelfth century of the Christian era. According to Buchanan (Martin's Eastern India) some of the Pāla Rājās lived there, which implies that it was a place of much importance at that period. The portion of the fort, which is called Bhartṛihari's palace, is the place where he performed asceticism. The tradition is that Bhartṛihari after eating the immortal fruit travelled to various places and halted at Sehwan, Bhartewar, Chunar, Benares and other places (JASB., 1837, p. 852). Bhartṛihari was the author of a celebrated work called Bhartṛihari-Śāstra and of the Vairāgya-sataka. For the story of his birth, see Prabandha-chintāmaṇi (Tawney's trans.) p. 198. He entered seven times a Buddhist monastery as a priest and seven times returned to the laity and became Upāsaka. He died in 651-652 A. D. (I-tsing's Record of the Buddhist Religion by Takakusu, p. 180 and General Introduction, p. LVII). The fort is said to have been protected by the goddess Gaṅgā Devī all the day, except in the first pahar of the morning, when it was taken by the English. It contains a state-prison where Trimbakji Danglia, the minister of Baji Rao who was the adoptive father of Nana Saheb, was kept confined till his death (Heber's Journal, Vol. I). The fort was strengthened by Sultan Mahmud before his descent on Benares in 1017; in 1575, it held out against the Mughal army for six months and in 1764, it was taken by the English.

Charitrapura—Puri in Orissa (Cunningham's Anc. Geo., p. 510; R. W. O., II, 205).

Charmanvati—The river Chambal in Rajputana. It has its source in a very elevated point of the Vindhya amongst a cluster of hills called Janapava. It has three co-equal sources from the same cluster, the Chambal, Chambela and Gambhirā. The river is said to have been formed by the "juice of skin" (blood) of the cows sacrificed at the Yajña of Rantideva (Mbh., Droṇa P., ch. 67; Meghadūta, Pt. I, v. 46).

Chattala—Chittagong (Tantrachuddamaṇi, ch. 51). The temple of Bhavāni on the Chandraśekhara hill near Sitākunda is one of the 52 Pīṭhas, where a portion of Sati's right hand is said to have fallen. The Bṛāhmi Tantra (ch. 31) contains some account of the Chandraśekhara hill as a place of pilgrimage.

Chatuṣpīṭha-parvata—The Assia range, one mile to the south of Jajpur in the district of Kajak in Orissa: Udaya-giri is a spur of this range, five miles from Bhuvanēśvara, containing many Buddhist caves and sculptures of ancient date. The range is also called Khaṇḍa-giri and Alti-giri. (JASB., Vol. XXXIX).

Chausath-joginī—Same as Bhṛigu-tīrtha.

Chāya—Porebunder in Guzerat: a famous port at the commencement of the Christian era.

Chedi—Bundelkhand and a part of the Central Provinces. It was bounded on the west by the Kali-Sindh and on the east by the Tonse. It is the Cheti of the Buddhists. Tod (Rājasthān, I, 43 note) identifies Chedi with Chanderi (Chandravati or Sandravatis of the Greeks), a town in Bundelkhand, which is said to have been the capital of Siśupāla, who was killed by Kṛishṇa (see also JASB., Vols. XV and LXXI, p. 101). It is 18 miles west of Lalitpur: the ruins of old Chanderi, however, are 8 miles north-west of the modern town (JASB., 1902, p. 108 note). Chanderi has been described in the Ain-i Akbari as a very large ancient city containing a fort. According to Dr. Führer (M. A. I.), General Cunningham, (Arch. S. Rep., IX, 106) and Dr. Bühler (Vikramāditya-charita, xviii, 95), however, Dāhala Maṇḍala or Bundelkhand was the ancient Chedi, Dāhala being on the Narbada. In the Skanda P., Revā-khaṇḍa, ch. 56, Maṇḍala is said to be another name for Chedi. Mandala is the Mandala of Ptolemy, a territory situated in that upland region where the Sona and the Narmadā have their sources (McCrimble's Ptolemy, p. 168). Kālāñjara was the capital of Chedi under the Gupta kings, and Suktimati its capital at the time of the Mahābhārata. Chedi was also called Tripurī from its capital now called Tewar, six miles from Jabbalpur (Epigraphia Indica, Vol. I, pp. 220, 253, and Hemakośha). Tewar (Teor) was the capital of Dāhala (Alberuni's India, Vol. I, p. 202). The Anargharāghava (Act VII, 115), says that Māhishamati was the capital of Chedimaṇḍala at the time of the Kalachuris. See Suktimati.

Chela-gaṅgā—The Kāveri (Harivamśa, ch. 136).

Chera—It comprised the present kingdom of Mysore, Coimbatore, Salem, South Malabar, Travancore and Cochin. Chera is a corruption of Kerala. The period from the third to the seventh century A. D., appears to have been the most flourishing in the history of this kingdom. In Asoka's Edicts, it is called Keralaputra. Its ancient capital was Skandapura situated at a short distance to the west of Guzzelhat Pass (JRAS., 1846, p. 11) in the Coimbatore district. According to Ptolemy, who lived in the second century A. D., its capital was Karoura or Karur, called also Vanji, situated near Cranganore on the left bank of the Amarāvati, a tributary of Kāverī; its larger capital was Tālkād (Dr. Burnell's South Indian Palaeography, p. 33). Tālkād or Dalavanapura is situated on the left or north bank of the Kāverī, 28 miles south-west of Mysore city, and about 30 miles east of Seringapatam: its ruins are even now called Tālkād. It was the capital of the Gaṅgā Vamśis from the third to the ninth century A. D., and then of the Cholas and Hoysala Ballalas who, however, removed the capital from Tālkād to Dvārāvati or Dorasamudra, now called Halebid, in the Hassan district of Mysore in the 10th century. It was taken by the Rājā of Mysore in 1634. For an account of the Chera kings, see Ind. Ant., I, 360; J. R. A. S., 1846, pp. 1-29.

Cheta—It is the same as Chetiya or Chetiya-giri. (Vessantara-Jātaka in the Jātakas vi, 266; cf. Snence Hardy's M. B., 119).

Cheti—Same as Chedi. Its capital was Sotthivati (Jātakas, iii, 272). See Suktimati.

Chetiya-giri—Besnagar, three miles to the north of Bhilsa in the kingdom of Bhopal, where Asoka married Devi. By her he had twin sons, Ujjenia and Mahinda, and afterwards a daughter Śaṅghamittā. It was the capital of the country called Dakkhinagiri (Turnour's Mahāvamsa, ch. XIII) which is perhaps a corruption of Daśārṇa. Dr. Rhys Davids identifies it with Sanchi and Bidiśā, but these two places are very close to Besnagar. According to General Maisey also, Chetiya-giri is Sanchi "with its numerous Chetiyas or stūpas" about 5 miles south-west of Bhilsa (Maisey's Sanchi and its Remains, pp. 3, 5). It was also called Chetiya and Chetiyānagara or Chaitya-giri. It is situated at Triveṇī or Triple Junction of the rivers Betwa, Bes (or Besali) and Gaṅgā, of which the last is believed to flow underground (Cunningham's Bhilsa Topes, p. 364). See Bessanagara.

Chhatravati—See Ahichchhatra.

Chhutudri—The river Chukki in the Panjab which joins the Bias: it is not the Śatadru or Satlej.

Chidambaram—Same as Chittambalam (Devi-Bhāgavata; vii, 38). Southern India possesses five Bhūtika or elementary images of Mahādeva, namely, the Kṣiti or earth image at Kāśchīpura, Āp or water image at Jambukeśvara, Teja or fire image at Aruṇātchala, Marut or wind image at Kālahasti, and Vyoma or sky image at Chidambaram (Dr. Oppert's On the Original Inhabitants of Bhāratavarsha or India, pp. 379, 380). Śiva has eight images of which five are elementary (Līṅga P., Uttara, ch. 12).

China—1. China. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata (Sabhā P., ch. 51) and Manu (ch. X, ślo. 44). In the mediæval period, it was called Mahāchina. The great wall of China was built by Che Hwang-te in 214 B. C. During the reign of the Emperor Ming-te, Kāśyapamātaṅga and Dharmaraksha were the first Indian Buddhists who went to China (67 A. D.) In the fourth century A. D., the Buddhist religion spread among the Chinese, and the first Buddhist Pagoda was built at Nanking by the Emperor Hiau Twu in 381 A. D. (Edkin's Chinese Buddhism, ch. vi.). 2. Anam (Sāhitya-Parishat-Patrikā, 1321 B. S., p. 63).

Chintāpurnī—A celebrated place of pilgrimage on a range of hills of the same name, in Hoshiarpur district, Panjab, containing a temple of Chhinnamastā whose picture is placed behind a Piṇḍa-mūrti or conical image. The temple is on the summit of a hillock.

Chitābhūmi—Baidyanāth or Deoghar in the Santal Pargana, containing the temple of Baidyanātha, one of the twelve Great Liṅgas of Mahādeva (Śiva P., Bk. I, chs. 38, 55). The Mahādeva there is said to have been established by Rāvaṇa. The place contains also the temple of the goddess Pārvati, the consort of the god Baidyanātha. It is said to be one of the fifty-two Pīṭhas (Hārḍapīṭha), as Sati's heart fell at this place. In the Uttara Purāṇa cited by Francklin in his Site of Ancient Palibothra, p. 21, Baidyanātha is called Pampāpuri or Palu-gaon, which is perhaps a corruption of Paralipura or Parali-grāma of the Siva Purāṇa. For a description of the temples of Baidyanātha or Deoghar, see JASB., 1883, p. 164—'On the temples of Deoghar' by Dr. R. L. Mitra.' In the Mahā-Liṅgeśvara Tantra in the 'Hundred Names of Śiva', it is mentioned that Baidyanātha and Vakreśvara Mahādevas are situated in Jhārakhaṇḍa, Siddhinātha and Tārakeśvara Mahādevas in Rāḍa, Ghaṇṭeśvara Mahādeva on the banks of the river Ratnākara (now called Kānā-nadi in the district of Hooghly), and Kapāleśvara Mahādeva on the banks of the Bhāgirathī. Rāvaṇa, while he was carrying Mahādeva from Kailāsa, felt a very uneasy sensation when he came to Haritakivana, the ancient name of Baidyanātha, as Varuṇa, the god of the waters had entered his belly. In order to relieve himself, he placed the god in the hand of Viṣṇu disguised as a Brāhman, and retired to the north-eastern corner of Deoghar called Hārḷājūdi (a corruption of Haritaki-vana) to relieve himself, and the result was the Karmanāsā rivulet flowing by the north of Hārḷājūdi. In the meantime, Viṣṇu put down Mahādeva at Deoghar and disappeared (Śiva P., Baidyanātha-Māhāt., ch. 4). The Trikūṭa hill, 6 miles to the east of Baidyanātha, contains a spring of water. The Tapovana hill where Rāvaṇa performed asceticism (Śiva P., Bk. I, ch. 55; Bṛihat Śiva P., II, 20) and which is about the same distance, contains a natural cave.

Chitrakūṭa—Kāṃptānāth-giri in Bundelkhand: it is an isolated hill on a river called the Paisuni (Payasvini) or Mandakini, where Rāma dwelt for some time during his exile (Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodh. K., ch. 55). It is about four miles from the Chitrakut station of the G. I. P. Railway.

Chitrakūṭa—Same as Payasvini (2): the river Paisuni (Vāmana P., ch. 13, v. 26).

Chitrarathā—The river Chitrarathī, a tributary of the Northern Pennar (Mbh., Bhishma, ch. 9).

Chitropalā—The river Mahānadi in Orissa below its junction with the Pyri (Mbh., Bhishma, ch. 9 and Asia. Res., Vol. XV; Brahma P., ch. 46). But it appears to be the Chittutola (Chitrotpalā), a branch of the Mahānadi (see Hamilton's Gazetteer, s. o. Mahanuddy).

Chitrotpalā—Same as Chitropalā (Mārkaṇḍeya P., ch. 57; Arch. S. Rep., vii., 155; xvii., 70). The river Mahānadi in Orissa. It was crossed over by Chaitanya after leaving Puri on his way to Bengal (Chaitanya-charitāmṛita, Pt. II, ch. 16).

Chittambalam—Chidamvaram in south Arcot district, about one hundred and fifty miles south of Madras, and seven miles from the coast. It contains the celebrated temple of Kanakasabhāpati, the name of a Mahādeva. The celebrated Saṅkarāchāryya is said to have been born at Chidamvaram (Ānanda Giri's Saṅkaravijaya) and he died at Kāñchipura at the age of thirty-two. According to another account, he is said to have been born at a village called Kalati on the Pūrṇā in Kanara (see Kerala) and to have died at Kōḍārnath in Garwal. It is now certain that Saṅkara was born at Kalati or Kaladi in Kerala during the reign of Rājāśekhara (Mādhavāchāryya's Saṅkaravijaya).

Choaspes—The Kunar or Kamah river which joins the Kopan (modern Kabul river) at some distance below Jalalabad. But according to Prof. Lassen, Choaspes or Euaspla is the Seesha (of Elphinstone's map) which falls into the Kabul river (JASB., IX, 1840, p. 472).

Choes—According to Lassen, Choes of Arrian. It is the Kamah river which falls into the Kabul river (JASB., 1840, p. 472).

Chola—The Coromandel Coast bounded on the north by the river Pennar or the southern Pinākinī river, and on the west by Coorg, including the country of Tanjore, i.e. from Nellore to Pudukottai. Its capitals were Uraiyur on the Kāveri (the Orthoura of Ptolemy—the royal city of Sornagos) near Trichinopoly in the second century A. D., and Kāñchipura, Combaconum and Tanjore (Tanjepur) in the eleventh century (Epigraphia Indica, Vol. III, p. 283). Chola was also called Drāvida (Padma P., Adikhaṇḍa, ch. 6), and is said to have derived its name from Chola, king of Kāñchipura (Ibid., Uttara Kh., ch. 74). The Chola kingdom merged as a marriage-dowry into the Pāñḍya kingdom and continued so for 570 years (Wilson's Mackenzie Collection; Intro., p. 51).

Chora—Same as Chola. In the Asoka Inscription at Girnar, Chola is mentioned as Choḍa (JASB., 1848, p. 169).

Chyavana-śrama—1. Chausā in the district of Shahabad in the province of Bengal: the hermitage of Rishi Chyavana (Skanda P., Avanti Kh., ch. 57). 2. The hermitage of the Rishi was also situated on the Satpura mountains, near the river Payoshai or modern Pūṛṣā (Padma P., Pātāla Kh., ch. 8). 3. Dhosi, six miles south of Narnol in the Jaipur territory, where the Rishi's eyes are said to have been pierced by a princess of Anupadeśa, whom he afterwards married. 4. Chilanla on the Ganges in the Rai Bareilly district: it was the abode of the Rishi who was restored to youth by the twin Aśvinī-kumāras.

Dāhala—Same as Chedi (Dr. Bühler's Vikramāṅka-charita: Introduction).

Dākini—Bhima-śaṅkara at the source of the Bhīmā, north-west of Poona (Dr. Oppert's On the Original Inhabitants of Bhāratavarsha or India, p. 379; Fergusson's Cave Temples of India, p. 367). The temple of Mahādeva Bhimaśaṅkara is a celebrated place of pilgrimage, and the god is one of the twelve Great Liṅgas of Mahādeva (Śiva P., Pt. I., chs. 38, 40; Fergusson's Cave Temples of India, p. 367). In the Śiva Purāṇa Dākini is said to be situated on the Western Ghats (Sahyādri). See Amareśvara.

Dakṣiṇa-Gaṅgā—1. The river Godāvari (Revā Māhāt., ch. 3). 2. In the Nṛsiṅha P., ch. 66, the Kāveri is called the Dakṣiṇa-Gaṅgā. 3. The Narbada is called the Dakṣiṇa-Gaṅgā in the Skanda P., (Revā Khaṇḍa, ch. 4). 4. The Tungabhadra is called the Dakṣiṇa-Gaṅgā in Bilhana's Vikramāṅkadevacharita.

Dakṣiṇagiri—1. Dakṣiṇagiri of the Mahāvamsa (ch. xiii): its capital was Chetiya (see Chetiya-giri): Daśārṇa of Kālidāsa is evidently a corruption of Dakṣiṇa-giri. See Daśārṇa. 2. The kingdom of Bhopal. 3. The name of a village in Ekanālā in Magadha, not yet identified; in this place Buddha delivered the Kāśibharadvaja-Sutta.

Dakṣiṇa-Kedāra—Baligāmi in Mysore. It contains a celebrated temple dedicated to Kedāranātha. Baligāmi is also called Ballipura and Balligamvo (Rice's Mysore Inscriptions, pp. 90, 94, 102).

Dakṣiṇa-Kosala—See Kosala-Dakṣiṇa.

Dakṣiṇa-Mathurā—Madura on the river Kṛitamālā in the province of Madras (Chaitanya Charitāmṛita, Madhya, ch. 9). It was also called Mathurā and Minākshi. It was the capital of the ancient kingdom of Pāṇḍya or Pāṇḍu. It is one of the 52 Pīṭhās where Sati's eyes are said to have fallen (Bhāgavata, X. 79 and Mahāvamsi, ch. 7). It was called Dakṣiṇa-Mathurā in contradistinction to Uttara-Mathurā or Mathurā of the United Provinces (Upham's Rājardndkari). Madura was a province of the kingdom of Vijayanagar till the middle of the sixteenth century when Viśvanātha, the founder of the Nayak dynasty, became its independent ruler, and Trīmula, the most powerful monarch of the line, reigned from 1623 to 1639. The great temple of Minākshi with its thousand-pillared hall was built by Arya Nayak in 1550.

Dakṣiṇa-Patha—The Deccan: the name was applied to that portion of the Indian Peninsula lying to the south of the Nerbada. It is the Dakṣiṇabades of the Greeks. (Matsya P. ch. 114 and Dr. Bhandarkar's Early History of the Dekkan, Sec. I; Rājasekhara's Bālarāmāyaṇa, Act VI; Apte's Rājasekhara: his Life and Writings, p. 21). The name was originally confined to a remote settlement of the Aryans on the Upper Godāvari (Vinaya Pīṭhaka, I, 195, 196; II, 298).

Dakṣiṇa-Piṇḍikini—Same as Pāpaghni.

Dakṣiṇa-Prayāga—Trivenī on the north of Hūgli in Bengal (Bṛihat-Dharma Purāṇa Pūrva Kh., ch. VI; JASSB., Vol. VI, 1910, p. 613).

Dakṣiṇa-Sindhu—The river Kali-Sindh, a tributary of the Chambal (Mbh., Vana P. ch. 82). It is the Sindhu of the Meghadūta (Pt. I, ch. 30).

Dakṣiṇāṭya—The Deccan: that part of India which lies to the south of the Vindhya range (Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla K., ch. 13). See Mahārāṣṭra.

Dakṣiṇa-Badarikāśrama—Mailkote, twelve miles to the north of Seringapatam in Mysore, where the principal Maṭh of Rāmānuja, the founder of the Śrī sect of Vaiṣṇavas is situated. It is also called Yādava-giri (see Yādava-giri).

Dalabhya-Āśrama—Dalmau on the Ganges in the Rai Bareilly District (JASSB., Vol. LXIX, p. 84).

Damalipta—Is a corruption of Tāmralipta: it was the capital of Sumha (Hema-kosha). See Sumha.

Damila—Same as Kerala: the Malabar coast (Akitta-Jātaka in the Jātakas, IV, 150), or South Malabar (Burnell's South Indian Paeology, p. 51). It is the Limurike of Ptolemy which, according to Dr. Caldwell, was a mistake for Damir-ike (see McCrindle's Ptolemy, p. 49), "ike" in Tamil meaning a country. It was near Nāga-dvīpa or Ceylon, and a Damila dynasty reigned there. Dhātusena (459-477 A. D.), defeated the foreign usurpers and restored the national dynasty (Mahāvamsi, ch. 38; S.B.E., X: Intr. XV). This shows that Damila was close to Ceylon.

Damodara—The river Dāmudā in Bengal (K. Ch.).

Danḍaka—Same as Danḍakāraṇya (Brahma P., ch. 27).

Danḍakāraṇya—Same as Mahārāṣṭra (Rāmāyaṇa, Āraṇya, ch. I, and Dr. Bhandarkar's Early History of the Dekkan, Sec. II) including Nagpur. Rāmachandra lived here for a long time. According to the Rāmāyaṇa, it was situated between the Vindhya and the Saibala mountains: a part of it was called Janasthāna (Uttara K., ch. 81; Uttara-Rāmacharita, Act II). According to Mr. Pargiter, Danḍakāraṇya comprised all the forests from Bundelkhand to the river Krishna (The Geography of Rāma's Exile in JRAS., 1894, p. 242). Bhavabhūti places it to the west of Janasthāna (Uttara Rāmacharita, Act I).

Daapura—Same as Udanapura.

Dantapura—The ancient capital of Kaliṅga (Dāṭhādihātuvāṃsa, Turnour's Account of the Tooth-relic in Ceylon—JASB., 1837, p. 860). According to some writers, it is the same as Puri (Jagannātha) in Orissa, which, they say, was the place where Buddha's tooth was kept and afterwards removed to Ceylon. The left canine tooth of Buddha is said to have been brought and enshrined by Brahmadaṭṭa, King of Kaliṅga, shortly after the death of the former. According to the Dāṭhāvāṃsa, the tooth was taken from the funeral pile of Buddha by Khema, one of his disciples, who gave it to Brahmadaṭṭa, and was kept and worshipped in a temple at Dantapura for many generations. The tooth was taken to Pāṭaliputra in the fourth century A. D., by Guhasiva, king of Kaliṅga. The tooth is said to have worked many miracles at Pāṭaliputra to confound the Nrigranthis or Jains at whose instigation it was ordered to be taken there. Rājā Pāṇḍu got the tooth from Dantapura (JASB., 1837, pp. 868, 1059.) It was brought back to Dantapura by king Guhasiva and placed in its old temple. After the death of Guhasiva in battle with the nephews of Khiradhāra, a northern king, who had attacked Dantapura for plundering the tooth, it was removed to Ceylon by his daughter, Hemamālā and her husband Dantakumāra, a prince of Ujjain and sister's son of Guhasiva, in the reign of Kirttīeri Meghavarma (A. D. 298–326) who guarded the relic at Anurādhapura: see Anurādhapura (Tennent's Ceylon; Turnour's Tooth-relic of Ceylon; Dāṭhāvāṃsa translated by Mutu Coomara Swami; and Turnour's Dāṭhādihātuvāṃsa in JASB., 1837, p. 866). It is now kept at Kandy rivardhanapura in the Maligawa temple. For the procession of the tooth-relic at Kandy, see Mahāvāṃsa, ch. 85. It has been variously identified with Danton in the district of Midnapore and with Rājmaṇḍri on the Godāvari. But it is now settled that the ancient Dantapura is Puri in Orissa and this identification is confirmed by the tradition that after Kṛishṇa was killed by Jarā, his bones were collected and kept in a box till king Indradyumna was directed by Viṣṇu "to form the image of Jagannātha and put into it belly these bones of Kṛishṇa" (Garrett's Classical Dictionary of India under Jagannātha Ward's History of the Hindoos, I, 206).

Dantura—It is evidently a corruption of Dantapura: see Dantapura. (Bṛihat-saṃhitā, xiv, 6.)

Darada—Dardistan, north of Kāśmīra on the upper bank of the Indus. Its capital was Daratpuri, which has been identified by Dr. Stein with Gurez (Mārkaṇḍeya P., ch. 57). It was a part of the ancient country of Udyāna (see Monier Williams' Buddhism). Dr. Stein says "Their (Daradas') seats, which do not seem to have changed since the time of Herodotus, extend from Chitral and Yasin across the Indus regions of Gilgit, Chilas and Bunji to the Kishangaogā valley in the immediate north of Kasmir" (Dr. Stein's Rājatarāṅgiṇī, Vol. I, p. 47).

Darbhavatī—Dabhoi in Guzerat, thirty-eight miles north-east of Bharoch and twenty miles south-east of Baroda (Burgess's Antiquities of Kathiawad and Kachh, p. 218. and Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 20). Führer (M.A.I.) identifies Darbhavati with Dibhai, twenty-six miles south-west of Bulandshahar. Dibhai was the Radoph of the Greeks.

Darddura—The Nilgiri hills in the Madras Presidency (Raghuvāṃsa IV; Bṛihatsaṃhitā, ch. 14; JRAS., 1894, p. 262). In some editions of the Raghuvāṃsa it is mentioned as Darddara. Same as Durddura.

Darbanapura—Disa on the river Banas in Guzerat (Bṛihajjyotiṣhārṇava).

Dāru-vana—See Chamatkārapura (Kārma P., II, chs. 37, 38). Same as Deva-daru-vana.

Dāru or Dārukā-vana, which contains the temple of Nāgeśa, one of the twelve Great Līṅgas of Mahādeva (Śiva P., I, 38) has been identified with Aundha in the Nizam's territory (Arch. S. Lists, Nizam's Territory, xxxi, 21, 79,) but the Śiva P., (I, 56) places Dārūkā-vana close to the Western Ocean.

Dārūkā-vana—See Dāru-vana.

Darva—The country of the Dārvas, a tribe living with the Abhisāras between the Vitastā and the Chandrabhāgā (Mahābhārata, Vana, ch. 51; Dr. Stein's Rājatarāṅgiṇī, Vol. I, p. 32; Vol. II, p. 432).

Dārvabhisāra—The whole tract of the lower and middle hills between the Vitastā and the Chandrabhāgā; it included the hill-state of Rājapuri; it was subject to Kāśmīra (Dr. Stein Rājatarāṅgiṇī, I, 32). See Darva.

Daśanagara—Same as Daśapura.

Daśapura—Mandasor in Malwa (Bṛihat-Saṃhitā ch. 14; Meghadūta, Pt. I, ślk. 48). For an explanation how Daśapura was changed into Mandasor, see Dr. Fleet's note in the Corp. Ins. Ind., Vol. III, p. 79. It is called Dasor by the people of the neighbouring villages.

Datarha—Dwarka Guzerat (Mbh., Vana P., cha. 12 and 13).

Datārpa—The name means "ten forts; ṛina = a fort." 1. The Mahābhārata mentions two countries by the name of Daśārpa, one on the west, conquered by Nakula (Sabhā P. ch. 32) and the other on the east, conquered by Bhīma (Sabhā P., ch. 30). Eastern Malwa, including the kingdom of Bhopal, was Western Daśārpa, the capital of which was Vidiśā or Bhilsa (Dr. Bhandarkar's History of the Dekkan, sec. III). It is mentioned in Kālidāsa's Meghadūta I, va. 25, 26). Its capital at the time of Asoka was Chaitiyagiri or Chetiyaigiri. Eastern Daśārpa (the Dosarene of the Periplus) formed a part of the Chhattisgaḍh ("thirty-six forts") district in the Central Provinces (Prof. Wilson's Vishṇu P., Hall's ed., Vol. II, p. 160, note 3) including the Native State of Patna (JASB., 1905, pp. 7, 14). 2. The river Dasan which rises in Bhopal and falls into the Betwa (Mārkaṇḍeya P., ch. 57); Garrett identifies the river with "Dhosaun" in Bundelkhand (Garrett's Classical Dictionary). It is the Desaran of Ptolemy.

Dāseraka—Malwa (see Trikaṇḍaśeṣha).

Dehali—See Indraprastha.

Devabandara—Diu in Guzerat. In the 7th century A. D., the ancestors of the Parsis of Bombay left Persia on account of oppression and resided for some time in Diu before they finally settled in the island of Sanjan on the Western Coast of India in the early part of the 8th century A. D. (Bomb. Gaz., IX, Pt. II, pp 183 ff. XIV, pp. 506—536; Journal of the Bom. Br. of the R. A. S., I, p. 170).

Devadāruvana—Same as Dāruvana, where Liṅga-worship was first established. It was situated on the Ganges near Kedar in Garwal (Kūrma P., Pt. II, chs. 37, 38; Śiva P., Bk. IV, ch. 13, v. 16; Rāmāyaṇa, Kishk., ch. 43). Badarikāśrama was situated in this Vana (Ānanda Bhaṭṭa's Baṭṭa-charita, II, 7).

Devagada—Same as Dharagada.

Devagiri—1. Dowlatabad in the Nizam's territory. It is mentioned in the Śiva P. (Jāna Saṃhitā, ch. 58). See Mahārashtra and Śivālaya. 2. Part of the Aravali range. 3. A hill situated near the Chambal between Ujjain and Mandasor (Meghadūta, Pt. I). It has been identified by Prof. Wilson with Devagara situated in the centre of the province of Malwa on the south of the Chambal.

Devakūṭa—Śrīpāda: Adam's Peak in Ceylon (Turnour's Mahāvamsa). See Sumana-kūṭa.

DICTIONARY OF THE SOUTH ANDAMAN LANGUAGE.

PREFACE.

As the interesting Negrito race inhabiting the Andaman Islands is doomed to early extinction—save possibly the small section occupying Little Andaman,—and as their languages have been studied by but a few persons, I have been invited by my old friend the Editor of the Indian Antiquary to place at his disposal for publication in that Journal the MSS. of my Andaman Dictionary, which represent the results of my study during the thirty-two years of my connection with those Islands, of the words, together with illustrative sentences, phrases, etc., of that one of the languages, viz., the South Andaman, with which I was conversant; and to supplement the same, by means of Appendices, with as much additional matter of interest as can be culled from my notes, many of which date from before 1880. There will even then still remain, in MSS. almost ready for publication, much material of scientific value dealing with the Grammar, Syntax, Songs, etc., of these Islanders, prepared between 1876-1880 by Sir R. C. Temple, who collaborated with me in those far-off days.

The published works of writers who have sought to advance our knowledge of the Andamanese, or of their languages, or both, are the following:—

1794. Colebrooke, (R. H.) "Asiatic Researches", Vol. IV., 1807.

1863. Mouat, (Dr. F. J.) "Adventures and Researches among the Andaman Islanders." London.

1877. Man and Temple. "The Lord's Prayer in the South Andaman Language." Calcutta.

1880. Ball, (V.) "Jungle Life in India." London.

1881-2. Man, (E. H.) "Aboriginal Inhabitants of the Andaman Islands." R. Anthropol. Inst. Journ., London. (Re-printed in Book Form in 1885 as "The Andaman Islanders)."

1882. Ellis, (Dr. A. J.) F.R.S. "Report of Researches into the Language of the South Andaman Island," vide Transactions of the Phil. Soc., London.

1887. Portman, (M. V.) Andamanese Manual. London.

1893-8. Portman, (M. V.) "Record of the Andamanese." (XI Vol. MS in India Office, London.)

1898. Portman, (M. V.) "Notes on the Languages of the South Andaman Group of Tribes." Calcutta.

1899. Portman, (M. V.) "History of our Relations with the Andamanese." Calcutta.

1902. Kloss, (C. B.) "In the Andamans and Nicobars." London.

1902. Temple, (Sir R. C.) "A Grammar of the Andamanese and Nicobarese Languages." Port Blair. (A reprint from the Census Report, 1901.)

1903. Temple, (Sir R. C.) "Report on the Census of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, 1901." Calcutta.

1907. Temple, (Sir R. C.) "A Plan for the Uniform Scientific Record of the Languages of Savages Applied to the Languages of the Andamanese and Nicobarese." (Indian Antiquary; Bombay.)

1908. Temple, (Sir R. C.) "Andamans." (Ency. of Religion and Ethics.)

1909. Temple, (Sir R. C.) "Andaman and Nicobar Islands." (Imperial Gazetteer of India, Provincial Series; Calcutta.)

Soon after the commencement of my studies I was fortunate in obtaining an introduction to the late Dr. A. J. Ellis, at that time President of the Philological Society (London). He kindly took an interest in my work and prepared for me alphabets suitable for committing to paper the tongues of the Andamanese and Nicobarese hitherto unwritten, except for a little book using the Indian (Jones-Hunter) system of transliteration published by myself and Sir R. C. Temple.

For the convenience of the reader I reproduce here, with amendments necessary to suit the typography of this Journal, an abstract of the Andaman alphabet, as found on pp. 49-50 of Dr. Ellis' Report above-mentioned, which formed part of his Presidential Address to the Philological Society in 1882 (vide Transactions 1882-3-4).

The Andamanese have been found to be divided into twelve tribes speaking languages, which, though more or less distinct, are yet so closely allied as to form a group. The language to which this dictionary refers is the Aka-bea, or language of the South Andaman tribe.

Although the map shewing the position of each tribe with their respective tribal names has been already published in this Journal (vide Vol. XXVI, p. 217)—in order to illustrate Sir R. C. Temple's paper of 1907 above-quoted,—it is thought desirable at this time to re-issue it as an accompaniment to this volume.

RULE.

In the above alphabet the syllable under stress in any word is shown by placing a turned period (') after a long vowel, or the consonant following a short vowel, in every word of more than one syllable.

<sup>1</sup> ā accented before a consonant, is the English a in mat, as distinguished from à, which is the short ā or Italian a in anno.

<sup>7</sup> ng is a palatalised ng, and bears the same relation to it as ā bears to n. To pronounce ā attempt to say n and y simultaneously; to pronounce ng do the same for ng and y.

<sup>11</sup> This t' is a post-aspirated t, like the Indian th, quite different from English th, and hence to prevent confusion the Greek spiritus asper is imitated by a turned comma. The sound t' is common in Irish English, and may often be heard in England.

INTRODUCTION.

I think that I can best introduce the reader to the South Andaman language by freely extracting the remarks made thereon by the late Dr. A. J. Ellis, F.R.S., F.S.A., on his retirement from the Chair of the Philological Society for the second time on 19th May 1882: he then gave a "Presidential Address" by way of a "Report on the Researches into the Language of the South Andaman Island" from the papers of Mr. E. H. Man (C.I.E.) and Lt. R. C. Temple (Lt.-Col. Sir R. C. Temple, C.B., C.I.E., F.S.A.). From this Report are taken the following paragraphs verbatim, with such textual alterations as are necessary after so many years. It will be observed that in consequence necessary references to myself and my procedure are by name.

The South Andaman language, called by the natives d'kâ-bê-a-da, consists in the first place of a series of base forms, reducible to roots. These forms may answer to any part of speech, and in particular to what we call substantives, adjectives or verbs. These forms do not vary in construction, and are not subject to inflexion proper. Hence there is nothing resembling the grammatical gender, declension or conjugation of Aryan languages; but the functions of such Aryan forms are discharged by prefixes, postpositions, and suffixes. It is only in the pronouns and pronominal adjectives that there is anything which simulates declension. And it is only by the use of the prefixes that anything like concord can be established.

The Andamanese have of course words which imply sex, but they are in general quite unrelated forms; thus: âbâ lada man âpai'ida woman; âkâkâ-dakada boy, aryô-ngida girl; ârô-dingada father, âbê-tingada mother. 'Male' and 'female' are represented even for animals by the above words for 'man' and 'woman,' without the affixes, which are usually omitted in composition,<sup>12</sup> as bû'la, pai'l, and when the animals are young by the names abwâ-rada bachelor, or abjad'ijô-gda spinster, rejecting the affixes as uû'ra, jad'ijô'g, see below, letter to Jam'bu, sentences 15 and 16. Even in the Aryan languages 'gender', the Latin 'genus', means only a 'kind', and as it so happened that the kind with one termination included males, with another females, and with a third sexless things, the time-honoured names masculine, feminine and neuter arose. But the classification thus formed has, properly speaking, nothing to do with sex, as may be seen at once from sentinel being feminine in French (la sentinelle) and woman neuter in German (das Weib). We may see from the discussions in Grimm's grammar how difficult, or rather impossible, it is to recover the feeling which led to that grouping in German, and the same difficulty is felt in other languages. The Andamanese grouping which takes the place of gender is, on the contrary, clear enough in the main. The Andamanese consider, first, objects generally, including everything thinkable. Then these are divided into animate and inanimate. Of course the vegetable kingdom is included in the latter. The animate objects are again divided into human and non-human. Of the human objects there is a sevenfold division as to the part of the body referred to, and this division is curiously extended to the inanimate objects which affect or are considered in relation to certain parts of the body. These group distinctions are pointed out by prefixes, and by the form assumed by the pronominal adjectives. So natural and rooted are these distinctions in the minds of the Andamanese that any use of a wrong prefix or wrong possessive form occasions unintelligibility or surprise or raises a laugh, just as when we use false concords in European languages. These prefixes are added to what in our translations become substantives, adjectives, and verbs, and which for purposes of general intelligibility to an Aryan audience had better be so designated. But we require new terms and an entirely new set of grammatical conceptions which shall not bend an agglutinative language to our inflexional translation. With this warning, that they are radically incorrect, I shall freely use inflexional terms, meaning merely that the language uses such and such forms to express what in other languages are distinguished by the corresponding inflexional terms, which really do not apply to this.

Substantives, adjectives, and adverbs, generally end in -da, which is usually dropped before postpositions and in construction; hence when I write a hyphen at the end of a word, I shall mean that in its full form it has -da. Subs. and adj. also occasionally end in -re for human objects, and this -re is not dropped before postpositions. This same suffix -re is also extensively used in verbs, for our past tense active, or past participle passive. A common termination is also -la, which as well as -re implies human, and -ola, which is also honorific. What answers to our verbal substantives denoting either actor or action, is expressed by the suffix -nga added to verbal bases, both active and passive. What corresponds to the Aryan declension is carried out entirely by postpositions, as in fact it might be in English by prepositions, if we had a preposition to point out the accusative as in Spanish. In Andamanese these postpositions are generally ia of, or more usually hie of (where the i, as very frequently, is merely a euphonic prefix to vowels); len, to, in (but len also frequently marks out the object); lat to, towards; tek from and by; la by means of (instrument).

The plural is expressed by the addition of lō-ng-kā-lak<sup>12</sup> to the singular, when the distinction is considered necessary, which is not often, as the plural is left to be implied by the context, or is indicated by a prefix. Abstract subst. are formed from adj. by adding yō-ma-quality, or property, as lā-pangada long, lā-panga-yō-mada length. Negative subst. are formed by adding ba, an abbreviation for yā-ba, as abli-gada child, abli-gaba not a child, but a boy or girl.

Active verbs use the suffixes -ke for our gerundial form of infinitive,<sup>13</sup> for our pres. part., pres. ind., and occasionally future; -re for past time, -ka imperfect, -ngabo for future, -nga for verbal subst., actor and action; with numerous auxiliaries answering to our 'may, might, shall, should, will, would.' Passive verbs use -nga for the gerundial

<sup>13</sup> In his glossary Mr. Man uses the form in -ke (just as we say gerundially 'to exist') to shew that he means a verbal form. He says that if you ask an Andamanese the name of any action which you shew him, he will give you the form in -ke. But it remains to be established that this corresponds to our gerundial infinitive, at least I have not detected it in any example which Mr. Man has furnished, nor could he recall one. In Latin dictionaries audio, amo, are Englished 'to hear, to love', which they certainly do not mean. But as it is usual to give Latin verbs in this form, so it may be usual to give Andamanese verbs in the form in -ke, which would be like using audī, amā in Latin. Our gerundial or supine infinitive answers to the Latin ad audiendum, auditum. Dr. Morris prefers calling it the "dative infinitive" (Hist. Outlines of Engl. Accidence, 1872, p. 177). It is frequently used for the pure infinitive in English. The pure infinitive is properly only a verbal subst., and most nearly corresponds to one of the senses of the Andamanese form with the suffix -nga, but in point of fact there is nothing in Andamanese identical with the Aryan infinitive.

infinitive, the future, and verbal substantive, -ngaba for pres. and imperf. indic., -ngata for perf. and entô-ba-ngata pluperf., and -re for past participle.<sup>15</sup> Certain verbs distinguish the subject and others the object, as human and non-human, by change of prefix, but no rule can be given as to when a verb does one or the other, so that this is a mere matter of practice. There are also reflective verbs formed by pronouns.

The greatest peculiarity of the language is the treatment of the personal and possessive pronoun. All the pronouns are sexless, but the forms used for the so-called dative seem to vary with the group. The normal form is that for the third person, 'he, she, it,' for which I will use 'it' only for brevity, and 'they' for the plural. We have then sing. ôl it (subject), ta of it, en, ûl, at, ik, eb to it, in different forms, en it (object), and in it: pl. ôl'ôichik they, ô'nta of them, et, âlat, arai, ô'ntat, ô'llet, eb'et to them, in different forms, et them, ô'llet in them. These relations may also be expressed by the postpositions answering to case. Then for the first person d- sing. and m- plur., and for the second ng- sing. and plur., are prefixed to these forms; as ôl it, dôl I, ngôl thou, môl'ôichik we, ngôl'ôichik you. There is also what has been called a "fourth person," obtained by prefixing l to those forms of the third person, which are not the subject of the sentence, and these give common postpositional forms, as l'â of a or the (or English possessive 's), len to or in a or the, and also the object of a verb, lat, leb to a or the.

These preliminary explanations will serve to make intelligible the following examples, and will shew the structure of the language better than a long series of grammatical explanations. Observe that in all these examples a hyphen at the end of a word means that the suffix -da (applied to all things) may be added, but that it is omitted in construction, and heard only in isolated words or at the end of a clause. The hyphens between parts of a word separate the prefix, the suffix, the postposition and the parts of which the word is compounded, and are used merely for the purpose of assisting the unaccustomed reader, generally they should all be written together in one word without hyphens, just as in German ereifern and not er-eifer-n, though the latter shews the approximate composition.

<sup>15</sup> Mr. Man 'conjugates' a verb thus, using the inflexional names. I translate the suffixes -ke do, does, -ka ing was, -re did, etc., as the nearest inflexional representatives, but they do not give the true feeling of the original, to which we have nothing which corresponds in English.

[Analytical translation; â-riâm formerly, dô-ra name of man, ab-jā-bag (human)-bad, l'edâ-re exist-did, dô-na but, â-chitik now, â-bê-ri-nga—(human)-good [or â-bê-ri-nga-ke (human)-good-is].] The 'is' generally unexpressed, in l'edâ-re the 'l' is the common euphonic prefix, edâ v. exist, 're past time; which may be expressed as 'exist-did,' the verb being always put in the infinitive (properly unlimited, undefined) form, and the suffix -re being expressed by 'did' as -ke may be by 'does', etc., as the simplest way of expressing present and past time; the simple copula is never expressed, but, in the second form â-bê-ri-nga is treated as a verb, and ke being added makes it present, so that there is an apparent expression of the copula. The termination -da as applied to anything which exists, to be derived from the partially obsolete v. eddâ exist.

No. 21. â-kâ-lâ-ma—who uses a wrong word to express his meaning (â-kâ- its, being applied to bang- mouth, and teg-ili- voice).

This will suffice to show the curious action of the South Andaman prefixes, which it will be seen presently refer especially to the different forms of the possessive pronoun when applied to different parts of the human body.

I looked about for some genuine native utterances, not translations, which might illustrate the natural speech of the country. Fortunately, Mr. Man was able to furnish me with precisely what I wanted. When he was sent officially to the Nicobar Islands, he took with him several young native Andamanese,<sup>16</sup> and in order to keep up their connection with their friends, and especially with their head-man, jam'bu (as he was always called, though that was not his real name), Mr. Man wrote letters for them at their dictation. He had to treat them quite like children for whom one writes letters, suggesting subjects, asking what they would say if they saw jam'bu, and so on. It was laborious work, which, however, Mr. Man did not regret, as it often furnished him with new words or phrases. These letters were then sent to the British officer in charge of the Homes at Port Blair, who did not know the language, but, from an explanation furnished, read the phonetic writing to jam'bu, sufficiently well to be understood, but to assist this officer Mr. Man furnished a free and an interlinear translation. I give two of these letters, which certainly, if any exist, are genuine specimens of South Andaman literature, but to make them as instructive as possible in showing the nature of the language, I divide them into numbered sentences, putting the text first, the free translation next, and afterwards, in square brackets, an analytically literal translation in the order of the original, in which, with the help of Mr. Man's translation, vocabulary and personal assistance, I endeavour to shew or explain the meaning and composition of each word and its parts, and its grammatical connection, occasionally adding other notes.

FIRST LETTER TO JAM-BU.

Cited by the simple numbers of the sentences.

1. mām jam'bu. Worshipful jam'bu. [mām is a term of respect by which chiefs or head men are addressed, perhaps 'honourable' or 'your honor' would be a nearer translation. jam'bu was only a nickname, but as he was always so called, Mr. Man cannot recollect any other.]

2. Med' ārdū'ru adbē'ringa. We are all in good health. [med' we, a contraction for med'a, the final a being lost before the following a of ārdū'ru all. The full form for 'we' is mōl'ōichik. For ad-bē'ri-nga well, see No. 5.]

3. bīrma-chē'lewa tārō'lo tek mij'i' at yed yā ba. Since last steamer no one has been ill. [bīrma funnel, chē'lewa ship, not one of their own boats; the Andamanese prefer if possible making a new word to adopting a foreign one, the present compound is more original than the modern Greek 'atmōploion, which is a mere translation of 'steam vessel'. tārō'lo last, tek from, since, postp. mij'i'at a contracted form of mij'ia at, properly

<sup>16</sup> Their names and nicknames (in parenthesis) were J'ra (kō'ro hand), bi'da (t'dal eye, as he had large saucer eyes), Jō'ra (Henry, his name when at the Ross orphanage), ad-i (Tom, the name Mr. Man gave him when he first came to Viper Island), J'ra (jō'dō entrails, so called from his protuberant belly when a child). These names may be preserved as those of the unwitting originators of Andaman literature. One other name of a native should be added, although he was not taken with Mr. Man to the Nicobars, on account of illness, and indeed he died shortly after Mr. Man left. This was bi'a (pā'g foot, so called from his large feet). He was the elder brother of the above-named Jō'ra (Henry). All the time that Mr. Man was in charge of the Andaman Homes, about four years, bi'a worked with him. He was the most intelligent and helpful native Mr. Man met, and was his principal informant throughout. Mr. Man often told him that he would bring his name to notice, and thus redeem his promise.

[mar applied to a young unmarried man, or a man who remains childless for the first 4 or 5 years after marriage, after which time, he is called mā-ra, the ordinary name for a married man who has children, of which the honorific form mā-ola is applied to chiefs only. lô-ra (Henry) the name of the youth. ā-chitiki now, achi-baiya then. ig bā-dig-nga-len appearance-in, see Nos. 9 and 10. (This is one of the verbs which change the final letter of the base according to the suffix, but the law of change is not yet fully ascertained. In this case g is apparently inserted before -re and -nga, but on the other hand it may be simply omitted before -ke.) dā-kar a tub or bucket. bō-dia big. dā-kar-bō-dia, big as a tub. (There are five words for big. 1. bō-dia which when 'human' becomes ābō-dia, but here has no prefix on account of being in composition, 2. dō-ga, 3. chā-nag, and 4. tā-ba-nga, which are 'humanised' by ab, 5. rō-chobo 'humanised' by ā. 6. mar wō-i ūn-wōt-tai jnga tā-paya. Master wō-i is a great flying-fox shot. [mar see, 4. wō-i the name of a youth (about 16 years old), of the tribe that the South Andamanese call ā-kā-jū-wēi-da, who came in a canoe from Middle Andaman to Port Blair, where he made an important statement concerning the manners and customs of his tribe, which was reduced to writing by Mr. Man, and is published, chiefly in English, in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, vol. xi pp. 280-2. When he arrived at Port Blair, his language was unintelligible to the natives there, but he quickly learned their language, and as he was a very nice fellow, he was induced to remain by marrying him to a pretty girl (named in 20), who was still very young. As they had at that time no family, he was still called mar. ūn refers to skill, see Nos. 7, 8, 16. wōt or wōt in construction, flying-fox. taij shoot with an arrow. nga sign of verbal subst. The species of palm leaf ordinarily used for these roofs is called chàng-ta). lóng-pá-len near an inanimate object. (Other terms are á-ká-pá-len or ót-pai'cha-len near to an animate object; eb-é-r-leg-ilen near a tree or post; yapá-len near as one place to another, ya giving indefiniteness of object, compare bā and yabā 'little.') uít flying lxx. leb for, postp. ér-ké-dang-ke search in-trees-does, (érem jungle), á-ta v. search on the ground for an inanimate object, ab-á-ta v. for an animate object.]

The natives mean by the word to bend the head and touch the forehead, that is, to salaam, as they were taught to do by the Rev. Mr. Corbyn, the first person who had charge of them; it is a case, then, of a new word, which may be advantageously compared with the Greek προσκύειν, to play the dog to; sometimes chillâ'm, a mispronunciation of salaam, is used. ititâ-n-ke send-do, see 22.]

29. kam wai môl-ôichik! Good-bye! [kam here. wai indeed. môl-ôichik we, full form. The ceremony of taking leave by word of mouth is rather long. The host accompanies his visitor to the landing-place, or at least to a considerable distance. On parting, the visitor takes his host's hand and blows upon it; after the compliment is returned, the following dialogue ensues. DEPARTING VISITOR: kam wai dôl, here indeed I. HOST: ê aye (a contraction for ê no yes), û-chik wai ôn, hence indeed come, tain tâ'lik kach ôn yâte? when again hither come who (=very well, go, when will you come again? DEP. They then repeat the ceremony of blowing on each other's hands, and part shouting invitations and promises for a future date until beyond earshot. There are no Andaman words of greeting. Relatives on meeting throw their arms round each other and weep for joy. When any other persons meet, they simply stand looking at each other in silence for a long time, sometimes as much as half an hour, before one of them ventures to speak.]

Last month we visited Katchall Island [ógar moon, ógar-dē'reka-yabā' moon-baby-small, or new moon, ab-dē'reka- human baby. ógar-dērka- the moon two or three days old, ógar-chā'nag- moon-big, first quarter, ógar-chāu- moon-body, full moon, (so bō'do-chāu- sun-body, is noon, and gū'rug-chāu- night-body, is midnight), ógar-kī'nab- moon-thin last quarter, la-wai'aga-nga- waxing, lār-ō'dowa-nga waning. fā' human, No. 3, with euphonic l, because apparently they regard the moon as a male, mai. a.ógar-, Mr. Moon, and seem to look upon it as more like a man than any other inanimate object. The sun is regarded as female, and is hence called chān'a-bō'do-, Mrs. Sun. So also in German and Anglo-Saxon, the moon is masculine and the sun feminine. itār-i-re extinguished-was, like any other light. med'a we. kāt'chu Katchall Island, one of the Nicobar group. len to or at. yō'bolire disembark-did, see 24.]

37. ká-to igbú-dwa-lóngká-lak bē-ringa-l'iglā árdú-ru ún-rá-da. The people of that part are the best of all, they are all liberal. [ká-to there. ig- Nos. 9, 10, 17. bú-dwa dweller in a hut or village, fellow-countryman, see 7. lóng-ká-lak sign of plural, used because there is nothing else in the sentence to indicate plurality. bē-ringa good. l'iglā (l' euphonic) used alone means 'distinct', but when joined to a word of quality it shews the highest degree, superlative, most good, best, mai'a iglā-head chief. árdú-ru all. ún-rá-da (Nos. 7, 8, 12, 13, 16) liberal.]

38. mar wó-i, í-ra-jó-do bē-dig ká-to reg pá-ta igbā-dignga bē-dig mú-gum len pò-i chatnga l'edá-re reg-gū-mul lē-re. [bē-dig also, see 36. reg pá-ta pig fat, that is, fat pig, not pig's fat, see 34. ig-bā-dig-nga seeing-(verbal subst.), see 11. bē-dig consequent on. mú-gum inside or belly, tármú-gum beneath. len to, postp. pò-i chat-nga fond of (any kind of food)-(verbal subst.). l'edá-re because of (see 23), i.e., feeling fond of food to their inside. reg-gū-mul pig-ceremony. We have no corresponding word to gū-mul, it belongs to the peculiar institutions of the Andamanese. Mr. Man says: "Although wó-i had been recently induced to marry, he was only a youth of about 16, and had not yet gone through the ceremony of 'young man making' known as gū-mul lē-ke (gū-mul devour-does), when the young neophyte who has for some time past evinced his powers of self-denial, and thereby, in a measure, his fitness to enter upon the cares and trials of married life, is enabled after a course of three ceremonies (known as yā-dī-gū-mul-turtle ceremony, ā-ja-gū-mul-honey ceremony, and reg-jī-ri-or simply, as here, reg-gū-mul-pig's kidney-fat or simply pig ceremony), which take place at intervals with a degree of external ceremony, to resume the use of these favourite articles of food. lē-re devour-did. These ceremonies apply to the young of both sexes before reaching puberty. After this period the individual is said to be bō-tiga-, which implies that he or she may indulge in any kind of food at pleasure. During the period (lasting sometimes 2 or 3 years) of their abstention they are called ā-kā-yā-b-, or ā-kā-yā-ba- and the fasting period is termed ā-kā-yāp-".]

39. tārō-lolen atyēd-re yā-bada. They have suffered no ill consequences thereby. [tārō-lo-len last-to, that is, afterwards, see 18. at-yēd-re, at is the plural form of the human prefix ab (see 11). yēd be sick, re past time, that is, men were sick. yā-ba-da not. They fancy that to break the gū-mul (see 38) will entail serious consequences, the fact being that they then generally gorge themselves with these rich articles of diet, and hence make themselves ill.]

[med'a we, ā-chitik now. ē-kan selves. leb for. ró-go pig. ikpō-r two, that is, a few; as two is the largest number for which they have a name, they use it indefinitely, see 36. mō-to our own, pai-cha lap, len to, that is, 'in our midst'. dō-to s. mō-to pl. ngō-to and ō-to s. and pl. are the reflective forms of dōt s. mōtot pl., ngót and it, etc., as ti dōt jē-ke he my-head shave-does, but dōt dō-to jē-ke I my-own-head shave-do. chí-lyu ke fattening-are, see 17.]

eku Katchall. len to, postp. yəu'ga-re go-did, used for going to a particular place, otherwise lir is used.]

42. kā'to ō'gun ā'rla ā'batū'l bar'mire, (but) spent only one day there. [kā'to there. ō'gun only. ā'rla day. ā'ba-tū'l one, see also 10 and 43. bar-mi-re spend-did, passing the night there, as on a visit.]

The usual way to catch turtles is to harpoon them with a spear called kouai'a lō'ko dū't-nga, consisting of the tōg-, or a long bamboo haft, at one end of which a socket is provided for the kouai'a-, which is a short pointed and notched iron harpoon; these are connected by a long line, bē'tma-. The thick end of the tōg- is called ār-bō'rod-, and the socket end ā'kā-chāng-.]

45. med'a dī'lē ē'remlen mai'i lā'kātāng id'liā-gō'iya igbā'digre: kianchāō' ā'chitik kā'rin tō'ug pā'tke. 46. mamjō'la ā'rtām ā'rlalen chit'i yī'tike, tō'batek med'a ē'la dō'gaya tā'ike. The former mamjō'la is always writing, meanwhile we are making lots of pig-arrows. [mam-jō'la homes-chief, a word coined since the Andaman 'Homes' were established, and used in addressing the officer placed in charge of them. The first syllable appears to be a form of mām (see 1), and the whole word is an abbreviation for mām-mai'ola worshipful chief, of which some persons suppose it was first an English corruption, afterwards adopted by the natives. In this letter Mr. Man himself is referred to, as he ceased to be in charge of the 'Homes' when he was transferred to the Nicobars. ā'rtām old, applied to animate or inanimate objects, but here it only means 'former', for Mr. Man was not aged. ā'rla-len day-to, always. chit'i letter, a Hindustani word. yī'ti-ke tattoo-does. The above examples shew the mode of thought of the natives, and what most occupies their attention. They are some of the very few expressions of genuine untutored barbarians which we possess. The analytical translation given shews the meaning of the parts of the words and the method of construction.

The Andamanese have poetry, and that of a most remarkable kind. Their only musical instrument is a stamping-board to keep time, and to this rhythm everything seems to be sacrificed. The words, their order, the prefixes, the suffixes, the postpositions, are all more or less changed, the order of the words suffers: in short the poetical language requires a special study, which is the more difficult to give, as songs are always impromptu, and not, as a rule, sung again after the one occasion for which they were composed, and then only by the composer. The following specimen of a song composed by the jam'bu, to whom the above letters were addressed, after his liberation from a six months' imprisonment, about 1865, for having shot down a sailor whom he found taking liberties with his wife, was given to Mr. Man by the author.

I. AS IT WAS SUNG.

SOLO. ngó'do kúk l'artá'lagí'ka,
mô'ro el'ma ká igbá'dàla
mô'ro el'mo lé aden'yarà pô-tôt lāh.

CHORUS. aden'yarà pô-tôt lāh.

II. LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE POETRY.

 sky surface there look-at
 bamboo spear.

III. PROSE ANDAMANESE VERSION BY MR. MAN.

ngól kúk l'artá'lagike
mô'ro el'ma len ká'to igbá'dignga bédig, mô'ro el'ma l'á en'yar len igbá'dignga bédig
pô-tôg len tág'imike.

IV. LITERAL TRANSLATION OF PROSE VERSION.

 sky-surface to there looking while, sky-surface of ripple to looking while,
 bamboo spear on lean-dost.

V. FREE TRANSLATION OF PROSE VERSION.

 gazing there at the sky's surface, gazing at the ripple on the sky's surface,
 leaning on the bamboo spear.

The rhythm was :

~ | ~ = | ~ | ~
 ~ | ~ | ~ | ~
 - | - | - |

The syllables marked = were of medial length. There were two short syllables at the end of the second and third lines. The three long syllables in the fourth line were very long and slow, each filling up a whole measure. Strange as some of the changes and omissions were, this is one of the least altered of the songs. We must suppose the man to be standing before his companions after liberation from prison, gazing sadly at the sky again and resting on his bamboo spear, and then the action would make the words intelligible.
